PREFACE TO THE TWENTY-FIFTH EDITION.

THIS well-known and standard work of reference first appeared in 1841, and then consisted of 568 pages of smaller size and larger type than those of later editions. Mr. Joseph Haydn, the compiler, whose name is identified with the title of the book, in 1855 resigned the editorship owing to failing health, and was succeeded by Mr. Benjamin Vincent, who undertook the continuance of the work, and the superintendence of its SEVENTH EDITION while passing through the press. This led eventually to the reconstruction of the book, which has been gradually effected by revision and copious additions. The new features included Chronological Tables at the beginning of the volume, innumerable historical, literary, scientific, topographical facts inserted in the body of the work, and a Dated Biographical Index. To make room for these additions the size of the page has been enlarged, many articles have been condensed or printed in smaller type, and matter of inferior importance expunged.

HAYDN is, therefore, not only indispensable to the journalist, to every public and private library, but to everyone who desires, either in public or private life, to possess an intelligent acquaintance with

DICTIONARY OF DATES.

AALESUND.

AALESUND, a fishing town in Norway, with an excellent harbour, built on three small islands on the coast of the province of Romsdal. Totally destroyed by fire, 23 Jan. 1904.

AARGAU (Switzerland), till 1798 included in Berne, was made an independent canton in 1803, and settled as such in 1815. Population 188,000. Augustine Keller (d. 1883), Swiss educationalist, successfully agitated against Jesuit teaching in schools 1840-4; and the expulsion of the Jesuits was decreed in 1847. The capital is Aarau. Heinrich Zschokke, novelist and historian (d. 1848), lived here.

ABACUS, the tile on the capital of a column. That on the Corinthian column is ascribed to Callimachus, about 540 B.C.—This name is also given to a frame traversed by stiff wires, on which beads are strung, used for calculating by the Greeks, Romans, and Chinese. M. Lalanne published an ABACUS at Paris in 1845, a form of which is used in English infant schools, 1902. In the United States it is called "The Adder."—The multiplication table has been called the Pythagorean abacus.

ABANCAY, a river in Peru, on the banks of which the Spanish marshal Almagro defeated and took prisoner Alvarado, a partisan of Pizarro, 12 July, 1537.

ABATTOIRS, slaughter-houses for cattle. In 1810 Napoleon decreed that five should be erected near Paris, which were opened on 15 Sept. 1818. One was erected at Edinburgh in 1851, and they form part of the London metropolitan cattle-market, opened on 13 June, 1855.

ABBASSIDES (ab'as-sidz). The name of the Arabian dynasty, descendants of Mahomet's uncle, Abbas-Ben-Abdul-Motaleb, born 556, died 652. Merwan II., the last of the Ommiades, was defeated and slain by Abul Abbas in 750, who became caliph. Thirty-seven Abbasside caliphs (including Haroun al Raschid, 786-809) reigned from 750 to 1258. They settled at Bagdad, built by Al-Mansour about 762. Their colour was black; that of the Fatimites being green, and that of the Ommiades white.

peace, renouncing his right to Normandy and other provinces, 20 May, 1259. In 1841 flint implements found here associated with remains of the mammoth and rhinoceros gave rise to the controversy on the antiquity of man.

ABBEYS, monasteries for men or women; see Monachism and Convents. The first abbey founded in England was at Bangor in 560; in France, at Poitiers, about 360; in Ireland in the fifth century; in Scotland in the sixth century. 110 alien priories were suppressed in England, 2 Henry V. 1414. Salmon. The gross disorders in these establishments occasioned their destruction in Britain. After visitations of inquiry, king Henry VIII. commenced the suppression of small monasteries to raise revenues for Wolsey's colleges at Oxford and Ipswich, 7 June, 1525; many small monasteries were suppressed in 1536; and all religious houses were suppressed throughout the realm by parliament, 1539-40:—186 large monasteries (revenue 104,919*l.* 13*s.* 3*d.*), 374 lesser monasteries (revenue 33,479*l.* 13*s.* 7*d.*), and 48 houses of the knights hospitallers (revenue 2385*l.* 12*s.* 8*d.*); total, houses, 608; estimated revenue, 140,784*l.* 19*s.* 6*d.* Tanner. The Anglo-Norman record society for the publication of the early chartularies and charters of the Norman and English abbeys was founded by the duke of Norfolk and others, 9 June, 1893. Abbeys were suppressed in Austria (by Joseph II.) in 1780, in France in 1790, in Portugal in 1834, in Sardinia in 1855, in Mexico in 1861, in Spain in 1857, and 1868, and in Italy in July, 1866, and April, 1873.

ABBOT (from Ab, father), the head of an abbey. In England, mitred abbots were lords of parliament; twenty-seven abbots and two priors thus distinguished, 1329; the number reduced to twenty-five, 1396. Coke. The abbots of Reading, Glastonbury, and St. John's, Colchester, were executed as traitors for denying the king's supremacy, probably for not surrendering their abbeys, 1539; see Glastonbury.

A B C CLUB, a name adopted by certain republican enthusiasts in Paris, professing to relieve the abaissés, or depressed. Their insurrection 5 June, 1832, was suppressed with bloodshed, 6 June. These events are described by Victor Hugo in "Les Misérables" (1862).

ABDUCTION. Carrying off of women in the Middle Ages was regarded rather as gallantry than crime: since the Statute of Merton, 20 Hen. III., many Acts passed, since repealed. The Acts now in force are the Criminal Law Consolidation Act, 1861, and the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885. It is felony to take away or detain against her will for improper purposes any woman of any age, or to allure or take from her parents or legal guardians a woman under the age of 21. The mere abduction of an unmarried girl under 16 is punishable by two years' imprisonment, and if taken away for the purpose of seduction under the age of 18 the same penalty is incurred. The consent of the girl is no defence. The abduction of a child under 14 is punishable by 14 years' imprisonment as the maximum penalty.

ABECEDARIANS, followers of Storch, an Anabaptist in the sixteenth century, derived their name from their rejection of all worldly knowledge, even of the alphabet.

ABELARD, a celebrated teacher of theology and logic, in 1118 fell in love with Héloïse, the niece of Fulbert, a canon of Paris, became her tutor, and seduced her. After a compulsory marriage, he placed her in a convent. Having been cruelly mutilated at the instigation of her relatives, he entered the abbey of St. Denis. Compelled to depart thence, accused of heresy, he built and lectured at the Paraclete, which eventually he made a convent, with Héloïse for the abbess. He died 21 April, 1142, and was buried in the Paraclete, where also Héloïse was laid, 17 May, 1164. Their ashes were removed to the garden of the Muséum Français in 1800, and to Père la Chaise in 1817. Their epistles, &c., were published in 1616.

ABENCERRAGES, a Moorish tribe of Granada, opposed to the Zegris. From 1480 to 1492 they constantly fought. They were exterminated by Boabdil (Abu Abdallah), the last king, who was dethroned by Ferdinand and Isabella in 1492; his dominions were annexed to Castile.

A statue of the prince consort was inaugurated by the queen 13 Oct. 1863; and one of queen Victoria by the prince of Wales, 20 Sept. 1866. Population (est.) 1910, 180,000.

ABYSSINIA, the country of the Habese, N.E. Africa. Its ancient history is very uncertain. The kingdom of the Axumitæ (its chief town Axum) flourished in the 1st and 2nd centuries after Christ. Christianity was introduced about 329 by Frumentius, consecrated Bishop of Abyssinia by St. Athanasius. Between 470 and 480 monasteries were established. In 522 Caleb, king of Abyssinia, at the request of the emperor Justinian, conquered Yemen. The Ethiopians possessed at that time the richest part of Arabia, traded to India, and were in constant communication with Greece. In the 7th century the Mohammedans expelled them from Arabia, and by the conquest of Egypt cut them off from the civilised world. About 960, Judith, a Jewish princess, murdered a great part of the royal family, and reigned forty years. The young king escaped; and the royal house was restored in 1268 in the person of his descendant Icon Amlac. In the middle ages it was said to be ruled by Prester John, or Prete Janni. The Portuguese missions, commenced in the 15th century, after much struggling against opposition, were expelled about 1633. The encroachments of the Gallas and intestine disorders soon after broke up the empire into petty governments. From the visits of James Bruce, 1768-73; Henry Salt, 1809-10; Edward Rüppell, 1834-7; major Harris, 1841; Mansfield Parkyns, 1844-7, much information respecting Abyssinia has been gained. Several expeditions into Abyssinia have been organised by the French government. The brothers Antoine and Arnauld Abbadie visited the country 1837-45. Abyssinia was divided into four provinces. ABYSSINIAN ERA is reckoned from the creation, which the Abyssinians place in the 5493rd year B.C., on 29 Aug. old style; their dates consequently exceed ours by 5492 years 125 days. To reduce Abyssinian time to the Julian year, subtract 5492 years 125 days.

ACADEMIES. Academia, a shady grove without the walls of Athens, said to have belonged to the hero Academus, was adorned with statues by Cimon, the son of Miltiades, and adapted for gymnastic exercises. Here Plato, 428-389 B.C., first taught philosophy, and his followers took the title of Academics.—Rome had no academies.*—Ptolemy Soter is said to have founded an academy at Alexandria, about 314 B.C. Abderahman I., caliph of Spain, founded academies about A.D. 773. Theodosius the Younger, Charlemagne, and Alfred are also named as founders of academies. Italy is celebrated for its academies; and Jarekuis mentions 550, of which 25 were in Milan. In 1874 Girolamo Ponti, of Milan, bequeathed about 35,000*l.* to the academies of science of London, Paris, and Vienna. Many of the following dates are doubtful.

He arrived at Spithead in the Centurion, having circumnavigated the globe, 15 June, 1744.

ACARNANIA, N. Greece. The people became prominent in the Peloponnesian war, having invited the help of the Athenians against the Ambracians, 432 B.C. Their libraries are said to have existed seventeen centuries B.C.

ACCENTS were first introduced in the Greek language by Aristophanes of Byzantium, a grammarian and critic who taught at Alexandria about 264 B.C. Accents were first used by the French in the reign of Louis XIII. (about 1610).

ACCLIMATISATION OF ANIMALS. This has been prosecuted with great vigour since the establishment of the Zoological society of London in 1829, and of the Société d'Acclimation in Paris. Numbers of European animals have been naturalised in Australia; the camel has been conveyed to Brazil (1859); alpacas are bred at Paris; and ostriches in Italy (1859). On 6 Oct. 1860, the Bois de Boulogne, near Paris, was opened as a zoological garden, containing only acclimatised animals. An acclimatising garden was established at Melbourne, Australia, in Feb. 1861, and efforts made to naturalise English birds, fishes, &c. See Fish and Climate.

ACCOLADE.—The embrace (ad collum) or slight blow on the neck or cheek when a neophyte was received into an order of knighthood. The custom is of great antiquity. Later, as at present, the flat of a sword was laid on the neck of the kneeling candidate. See Knights.

ACCOLTELLATORI (gladiators), secret assassins, at Ravenna and other places in Italy, 1874.

ACCORDION, a small free-reed wind-instrument with keys, invented at Vienna by Damian about 1821, and soon after introduced into England.

ACCOUNTANT-GENERAL IN CHANCERY, &c., an office instituted in 1726, and abolished by an act passed 6 Aug. 1872. In 1841, the office of accountant-general of the court of exchequer was abolished, and the duties transferred to the accountant in chancery.

ACCOUNTANTS' INSTITUTE, established at a meeting, 30 July, 1870; the Accountants' Society in 1872. Five societies were incorporated as "The Chartered Institute of Accountants of England and Wales," in 1880.

ACCUSERS. By occult writers, such as Agrippa, accusers are the eighth order of devils, whose chief is called Asteroth, or Spy. In Revelation, ch. xii. 10, the devil is called "the accuser of the brethren."—False accusers were to be hanged, by 24 Henry VI. 1446; and burnt in the face with an F, by 37 Henry VIII. 1545. Stow.

ACEPHALI (Greek a, no; cephalē, head), a term applied to certain sects who resisted their bishops and met privately, about 450; and also in canon law applied to such bishops, clerks, monks, &c., as claim or enjoy independence of the jurisdiction of the ordinary or metropolitan.

ACETYLENE, a luminous hydrocarbon gas resembling coal gas, discovered by Berthelot. First made in 1836 from potassium carbide by Edmund Davy. In 1862 Wohler discovered that carbide of calcium treated with water produced lime and acetylene. Over 2,000,000 have been invested in carbide plants in Canada and the United States (1908). The demand for acetylene for lighting purposes seems to be capable of indefinite expansion; its most familiar use is for cycle and motor lamps; but it is also applied to houses, railway trains (all the Canadian Pacific trains are lighted with it), and other purposes.

ACHÆMENIDÆ, a dynasty of Persian kings of which Cyrus the Great was the founder. It was overthrown by Alexander the Great.

ACHAIA (N. Peloponnesus), Greece, settled by the Achæi, reputed descendants of Achæus, the son of Xuthus. The kingdom was united with Sicyon or subject to the Ætolians until about 284 B.C. The Achæi originally inhabited the neighbourhood of Argos; but when the Heraclidæ drove them thence, they retired among the Ionians, expelled the natives, and seized their thirteen cities, viz. Pellene, Ægira, Ægium, Bura, Tritæa, Leontium, Rhypes, Ceryneæ, Olenos, Helice, Patræ, Dyme, and Pharæ, forming the ACHÆAN LEAGUE.

ACHEEN, capital of a kingdom N.W. of Sumatra, was visited by the Portuguese about 1509. Factories were set up here by the Dutch, 1596; by the English, 1602; by the French, 1621. For the war with the Dutch, see Sumatra.

The Nisero of Sunderland, with sugar from Sourabaya, stranded on territory of the chief of Pangai, a Malay dependent of Tuku Iman Muda, the rajah of Tenom, subject to the sultan of Achéén, 16 Nov. 1883.

18 British and 6 foreign sailors made prisoners; the captain released to negotiate; efforts to obtain their release, by warlike attacks and proffered ransom, ineffectual; the Dutch storm Tenom, but prisoners carried off, 7 Jan. 1884.

H.M.S. Pegasus sent there. The rajah demands free trade, and desires subjection to Great Britain. Earl Granville recommends conciliation to the Dutch government, announced May, 1884. See under Mansion House.

ACHONRY, SLIGO (N. Ireland), a bishopric founded by St. Finian, who erected the church of Achad, or Achonry, about 520, and conferred it on his disciple Nathy (Dathly, or David), the first bishop. The see, held with Killala since 1612, was united with Tuam in 1834.

ACHROMATIC TELESCOPES, in which colour is got rid of, were invented by John Dollond, and described in Phil. Trans. of the Royal Society, London, 1753-8.

ACIDS (now defined as salts of hydrogen) are generally soluble in water, reddens organic blues, decompose carbonates, and destroy the properties of alkalies, forming alkaline salts. The number of acids was increased by the Arabs; Geber (8th century) knew nitric acid and sulphuric acid. Theories of the constitution of acids were put forth by Becher (1669), Lemery (1675), and Stahl (1723). After the discovery of oxygen by Priestley, 1 Aug. 1774, Lavoisier (1778) concluded that oxygen was a constituent of all acids; but about 1810 Davy, Gay-Lussac, and others, proved the existence of acids free from oxygen. In 1816 Dulong proposed the binary or hydrogen theory of acids, and in 1837 Liebig applied the theories of Davy and Dulong to explain the constitution of several organic acids. Oxygen acids were termed anhydrides by Gerhardt (died 1856). Many acids have been discovered through the advance of organic chemistry.

ACOLYTES, an inferior order of clergy in the Latin church, unknown to the Greek church for four hundred years after Christ.

ACOUSTICS (from akouō, Greek, I hear), the science of sound, so named by Sauveur in the 17th century. The formation of sound in the air by the vibrations of the atmosphere, strings, &c., was explained by Pythagoras about 500 B.C., and by Aristotle, 330 B.C. See Telephone, Microphone, Megaphone.

The speaking trumpet said to have been used by Alexander the Great, 335 B.C.
Galileo's discoveries, about A.D. 1600.

His theorem of the harmonic curve demonstrated by Dr. Brook Taylor, in 1714; further perfected by D'Alembert, Euler, Bernoulli, and La Grange, at various periods of the eighteenth century.

Hooke calculated the vibration of sounds by the striking of the teeth of brass wheels, 1681.

Sauveur determined the number of vibrations belonging to a given note, about 1700.

Velocity of sound said to be 1473 feet in a second, by Gassendi; 1172 feet by Cassini, Romer, and others; 968 feet by Newton; 1090 feet, at the temperature of 32° Fahrenheit, by Tyndall; the velocity increases with the rise of temperature.

Chladni (who raised acoustics to an independent science) published his important discoveries on the figures produced in layers of sand by harmonic chords, &c., in 1817, and since.

Cagniard-Latour invented the Sirène (which see), 1819.

Savart determined the range of the perception of the human ear to be from 7 to 24,000 vibrations a second.

1830.
Biot, Savart, Wheatstone, Lissajous, Helmholtz, Tyndall, Lord Rayleigh, and others in the 19th century have greatly increased our knowledge of acoustics.

Over-tones, harmonics, well investigated by Helmholtz; under-tones by Auerbach, 1878.

Tyndall's experiments off the South Foreland on fog-signals and gun-cotton, demonstrated that the transmission of sound is checked by the non-homogeneity of the air, independently of fog and rain, July, 1873.

The results of Tyndall's experiments showed that the parabolic-muzzle gun with gun-cotton, and that of sir Richard Collinson's gun-cotton rocket, are very effective fog-signals. Fine-grain gunpowder with howitzers is the best sound-producer; pebble powder the worst, 1874-7.

Sound produced by electricity, light, and from radiant heat, see Telephone and Photophone, 1881.

Mr. A. Stroh exhibits the attraction and repulsion (resembling magnetic) produced by sonorous vibrations in tubes to the Telegraph Engineers, 27 April, 1882.

See Photography, 1909, and Telephones.

ACRE, a land measure, formerly of uncertain quantity, and differing in various parts of the country, was reduced to a standard by Edward I., about 1305. In 1824 the standard acre was ordered by statute to contain 4840 square yards.

ACRE, Acca, anciently Ptolemais, in Syria, was taken by the Saracens in 638; by the crusaders under Baldwin I. in 1104; by Saladin in 1187; and again by Richard I. and other crusaders, 12 July, 1191, after a siege of 2 years, with a loss of 6 archbishops, 12 bishops, 40 earls, 500 barons, and 300,000 soldiers. It was then named St. Jean d'Acre. It was retaken by the Saracens in 1291, when 60,000 Christians perished, and the nuns, who had mangled their faces, were put to death. Acre was gallantly defended by Djazzar Pacha against Bonaparte, till relieved by sir Sidney Smith, who resisted twelve attempts by the French, between 16 March and 20 May, 1799, when Bonaparte retreated. Acre, as a Turkish pachalic, was seized 27 May, 1832, by Ibrahim Pacha, who had revolted. On 3 Nov. 1840, it was stormed by the allied fleet under sir Robert Stopford, and taken after a bombardment of a few hours, the Egyptians losing upwards of 2000 in killed and wounded, and 3000 prisoners, while the British had but 12 killed and 42 wounded; see Syria and Turkey.

ACROBAT, from the Greek akron, extremity, baino, I go, a person who does difficult feats in tumbling, vaulting, trapezing, rope walking, &c. Among the more noted performers during the 19th century were Farioso, Mme. Saqui, Diavolo, Risley, Leotard (the first to do the flying trapeze), Onri, Niblo (the originator of the double somersault from the trapeze), Lulu and C. Elliot, Chantrell, and Matthews families, De la Vanti, and J.

W. Cragg and family, still performing. Blondin (Jean François Gravelot), a noted acrobat, crossed the Falls of Niagara in 1859 and 1860 (see Niagara), on the tight-rope, and performed similar feats at the Crystal Palace 1861-2; his last performance was at Belfast in 1866. He died 22 Feb. 1897.

ACROPOLIS, the ancient citadel of Athens, built on a rock. Near it stood the temple of Minerva, the Parthenon, which see. Other cities had similar fortresses.

ACROSTIC, a poem in which the first or last letters of each line, read downwards, form a word or sentence, is said to have been invented by Porphyrius Optalianus in the 4th century.

ACS OR ACZ (Hungary). The Hungarians under Görgey were defeated here by the Austrians and Russians, on 2 and 10 July, 1849.

ACT OF SETTLEMENT, &c.; see Accession, Succession, Supremacy, and Uniformity Acts.

The Act of Settlement passed in 1701, which secured to various persons the possession of forfeited estates of Irish rebels, was repealed by proclamation by the Parliament summoned by James II. in May, 1690, and much confiscation of the property of Protestants ensued. The act was restored by William III., 1690.

ACTA DIURNA; see Newspapers.

ACTA SANCTORUM ("acts of the saints"), a work begun by the Jesuits. The first volume appeared in 1643; the publication was interrupted in 1794, when 54 volumes, bringing the work down to 15 October, had been published. The work was resumed by the Jesuits in 1837, and 6 more volumes had been published in 1867. The writers have been named Bollandists, from John Bolland, who published the first two volumes.

ACTIUM, a promontory of Acarnania, W. Greece, near which was fought, 2 Sept. 31 B.C., the battle between the fleet of Octavius Cæsar and that of Marc Antony and Cleopatra, which decided the fate of Antony; 300 of his galleys going over to Cæsar. This victory made Octavius master of the world, and the Roman empire is commonly dated 1 Jan. 30 B.C. (the Actian Era). The conqueror built Nicopolis (the city of victory), and instituted the Actian games.

ACTON BURNEL, or Shrewsbury. At the parliament held here by Edward I., Oct. 1283, the "statute of merchants" against debtors was enacted.

ACTONIAN PRIZE, see under Royal Institution.

ACTRESSES appear to have been unknown to the ancients in the earliest times, men or eunuchs performing the female parts. They appeared under the Roman empire. Mrs. Colman was the first English public actress; she performed the part of Ianthe in Davenant's "Siege of Rhodes," in 1656.

ACTS OF THE APOSTLES, supposed to have been written by Luke in continuation of his Gospel. It terminates A.D. 63.

the privy council became greater during the reign of William III. His ministers included both Whigs and Tories, and their dissensions led to much maladministration, civil, military, and naval, and consequent popular discontent; the king was therefore compelled to have a united ministry, at first wholly composed of Whigs. The change was gradually effected, 1694-6. The control of the chief, now termed the "premier," began in the reign of Anne. "The era of ministries may most properly be reckoned from the day of the meeting of the parliament after the general election of 1698." Macaulay.* For a fuller account of each administration since 1700, see separate articles headed with the name of the PREMIER, given below in italics.

ADMINISTRATIVE REFORM ASSOCIATION derived its origin from an opinion that the disasters which occurred to the army in the Crimea in 1854-5 were attributable to the inefficient and irresponsible management of the various departments of the state. The association was organised in London, 5 May, 1855. A meeting was held in Drury-lane theatre on 13 June, and Mr. Layard's motion on the subject in parliament was negatived 18 June following. see Civil Service.

ADMIRAL. The title, derived from the Arabic, emir-al-bahr, "Lord of the sea," which occurs in the Chanson de Roland, 11th century, does not appear to have been adopted in England until about 1300. Alfred, Athelstan, Edgar, Harold, and other kings, were commanders of their own fleets. The first French admiral is said to have been appointed 1284. The rank of admiral of the English seas was first given to William de Leybourne by Edward I. in 1297. Spekman; Rymer. The first Lord High Admiral in England was created by Richard II. in 1385: there had been previously high admirals of districts—the north, west, and south. The duties have generally been executed by lords commissioners; see Admiralty. A similar dignity existed in Scotland from the reign of Robert III. In 1673, Charles II. bestowed it upon his natural son Charles Lennox, afterwards duke of Richmond, then an infant, who resigned the office to the crown in 1703; after the union it was discontinued.—The dignity of lord high admiral of Ireland (of brief existence) was conferred upon James Butler by Henry VIII., in May, 1534. The Admiral of the Fleet is the highest rank in the Royal Navy, corresponding to that of field-marshal in the army. We have now (31 Dec., 1909) on the active list 5 admirals of the fleet: senior admiral Sir Jas. E. Erskine, Oct. 1902; Sir Charles F. Hotham, Aug. 1903; Lord Walter Talbot Kerr, 1904 (retired 30 April, 1910); Sir John A. Fisher, 1905 (Lord John Fisher of Kilverstone, retired 25 Jan., 1910; Sir Arthur Knyvet Wilson (b. 1842), 1907; Sir Gerard Henry Uetred Noel (b. 1845), 1908; Sir Arthur D. Fanshawe, 1910; and 4 honorary admirals in the fleet: prince William Hy. of Prussia, 1901; king George of Greece, 1903; king Haakon of Norway, 1905; king Gustav V. of Sweden, 1908. In addition to honorary admirals in the fleet there are two honorary admirals of the fleet, the emperor William, appointed 1889; and Nicholas II. of Russia, appointed 1908.

[The rank of honorary admiral of the fleet was first created in 1887, in favour of his late majesty (king Edward VII., then prince of Wales), on the occasion of Queen Victoria's Jubilee.]

ADMIRALTY, COURT OF, a court for the trial of causes relating to maritime affairs, said to have been erected by Edward III., in 1357. It was enacted in the reign of Henry VIII., that criminal causes should be tried by witnesses and a jury, some of the judges at Westminster (or, as now, at the Old Bailey) assisting. The judgeship of the admiralty was constituted in 1514, and was filled by two or more functionaries until the Revolution, when it was restricted to one. Beaton. The judge has usually been an eminent doctor of the civil law. In 1844 the criminal jurisdiction of this court was removed, and by 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77 (1857), the judge of the Probate court was to be also judge of the Admiralty court. The judge of the Admiralty court, Dr. Stephen Lushington (appointed in 1838), resigned 1 July, 1867, and was succeeded by Sir Robert Phillimore, who retired March, 1883. The jurisdiction of this court was extended in 1861. The very ancient gilt anchor is set up in the Admiralty Court of the Royal Courts of Justice. The ancient silver oar is laid on the Registrar's Table, Oct. 1885. By the acts 1873-5, appeal is now to the Supreme Court of Judicature. See Supreme Court and Probate Court.

ADMIRALTY OFFICE dates from 1512, when Henry VIII. appointed commissioners to inspect his ships of war. During the Commonwealth the admiralty affairs were managed by a committee of the parliament; and at the restoration in 1660, James, duke of York, became lord high admiral. In 1662 the admiralty was first put into commission, the great officers of state being the commissioners; see succeeding changes below. In 1688-9 the admiralty was put into commission, and the board appears to have assembled at admiral Herbert's lodgings, in Channel-row, Westminster, he being at that time first lord. In 1830, 1832, and 1836 various changes were made in the civil departments, several offices being abolished or consolidated with others. In March, 1861, a royal commission recommended the abolition of the board of admiralty and the appointment of a minister of the navy department. The board was reconstituted 14 Jan. 1869, and 4 May, 1872. The collective action of the board was taken away, and concentrated in the person of the first lord.

The office removed from Somerset House to Whitehall, 1874-5.

New buildings erected by virtue of the Public Offices Site Act passed 24 July, 1882. The designs of Messrs. Leeming & Leeming, of Halifax, selected for approval by parliament, July, 1884.

ADMIRALTY, Whitehall. "At the south end of Duke-street, Westminster, was seated a large house made use of for the admiralty office, until the business was removed to Greenwich, and thence to Wallingford-house, against Whitehall." It was rebuilt by Ripley about 1726; the screen was erected, to conceal the ugliness of the building, by the brothers Adam, in 1776.—Lord Nelson lay in state in one of the apartments on 8 Jan. 1806; and on the next day was buried at St. Paul's.

Explosion in clerks' room (ascribed to gunpowder in an iron pot); Mr. Swainson much hurt; about 11 A.M. 23 April, 1885.

ADMIRALTY ISLANDS. A group of coral islands to the N.E. of New Guinea, about 2° S. lat. and 147° E. long., discovered by the Dutch 1616, area 878 sq. m., inhabited by a race of savages 800 in number. Together with New Britain annexed by Germany in 1885, and now form part of the Bismarck Archipelago. Case of cannibalism reported; 4 natives killed and eaten by hostile natives, end March, 1908.

ADMIRALTY AND WAR OFFICE ACT, to facilitate improvements in the organisation of these offices, by the retirement of clerks from certain of the civil departments by granting gratuities, was passed 10 Aug. 1878.

"ADMONITION TO THE PARLIAMENT," condemning all religious ceremonies but those commanded by the New Testament, was published by certain Puritans in 1571. Its presumed authors, Field and Wilcox, were imprisoned. A second Admonition by Thomas Cartwright was answered by archbishop Whitgift.

ADORNO AND FREGOSO, two families, of which the doges were frequently members, disturbed Genoa from the 14th to the 16th centuries, the former favouring the emperor, the latter the French king. Their power was annihilated by Andrea Doria about 1528.

ADRIAN'S OR HADRIAN'S WALL (to prevent the irruptions of the Scots and Picts into the northern counties of England, then under the Roman government) extended from the Tyne to Solway frith, and was eighty miles long, twelve feet high, and eight feet in thickness, with watch-towers; built 121. It was repaired and strengthened by Severus, 207—210.

ADRIANOPLE, in Turkey, so named after its restorer the emperor Adrian (who died 10 July, 138). Near here Constantine defeated Licinius and gained the empire, 3 July, 323; also, near here the emperor Valens was defeated and slain by the Goths, 9 Aug. 378. Adrianople was taken by the Turks under Amurath in 1394, and was their capital till the capture of Constantinople in 1453. It was taken by the Russians on 20 Aug. 1829; and restored 14 Sept. same year; after the capture of the Turkish army in the Shipka pass it was occupied by the Russians, without resistance, 20 Jan. 1878. Population 1885, 70,886; 1910, about 85,000. See Turkey.

ADRIATIC. The ceremony of the doge of Venice wedding the Adriatic sea (instituted about 1173), took place annually on Ascension-day. The doge dropped a ring into the sea from his bucentaur, or state barge, being attended by his nobility and foreign ambassadors. The ceremony was first omitted in 1797.

ADULLAM, a cave to which David fled from the persecution of Saul about 1062 B.C. (1 Sam. xxii. 1, 2.)

Mr. Hoismann, Mr. R. Lowe, earl Grosvenor, lord Elcho, and other liberals who opposed the Franchise Bill in 1866, were termed "Adullamites." During a debate on this bill on 23 March, 1866, Mr. Bright said of Mr. Hoismann, that he "had retired into what may be called his political cave of Adullam, to which he invited every one who was in debt, and every one who was discredited." &c. On 27 April, lord Elcho said, "No improper motive has driven us into this cave, where we are most happy family, daily and every hour, increasing in number and strength, where we shall remain until we go forth to deliver Israel from oppression." Although their opposition led to the resignation of the Russell ministry, they declined to take office under lord Derby in July, 1866. They did not vote together uniformly in 1867, and (lord Elcho and Mr. Wyld excepted) voted with Mr. Gladstone, for the disestablishment of the Irish church, 1 May, 1868.

ADULTERATION. That of food was prohibited in England in 1267, and punishments for it enacted, 1581, 1604, 1839, 1851, &c. Much attention was drawn to it in 1822, through Mr. Accum's book, called "Death in the Pot," and in 1855 through Dr. Hassall's book, "Food and its Adulterations." By an act for preventing the adulteration of food, passed in 1860, parochial chemical analysts may be appointed. An act to prevent adulteration of seeds passed 16 Aug. 1869, amended 1878. Another to prevent adulteration of food and drugs passed 10 Aug. 1872. Penalties for adulterating liquors were imposed by the new licensing act passed same time. The report of a commission, issued in July, 1874, declared that the public "were cheated rather than poisoned." All the anti-adulteration acts were repealed by the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, passed 11 Aug. 1875; which was amended in 1879; reported very effectual Dec. 1884. Act regulating sale of margarine, 9 Aug., 1899. The report of the select committee appointed in 1894, with suggestions, was issued in July, 1896.

ADULTERY was punished with death by the law of Moses (1490 B.C.; Lev. xx. 10)—and by Lycurgus (884 B.C.). The early Saxons burnt the adulteress, and erected a gibbet over her ashes, whereon they hanged the adulterer. The ears and nose were cut off under Canute, 1037. Adultery was ordained to be punished capitally by the parliament, May 14, 1650; but there is no record of this law taking effect; and it was repealed at the restoration. In New England the punishment for adultery was made capital to both parties, and several suffered for it, 1662. Hardie. Till 1857 the legal redress against the male offender was by civil action for a money compensation; the female being liable to divorce. By 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85 (1857) the "action for criminal conversation" was abolished and the Court for Divorce and Matrimonial Causes established with power to grant divorces for adultery and ill usage; see Divorce. An act was passed in 1869 permitting parties to suits for adultery to give evidence.

ADVERTURERS, see MERCHANTS.

ADVERTISEMENTS IN NEWSPAPERS, as now published, were not general in England till the beginning of the eighteenth century. A penalty of 50*l.* was inflicted on persons advertising a reward with "No questions to be asked" for the return of things stolen, and on the printer, 1754. The advertisement duty, (first enacted, 1712), formerly charged according to the number of lines, was afterwards fixed, in England, at 3*s.* 6*d.*, and in Ireland at 2*s.* 6*d.* each advertisement. The duty (further reduced, in England to 1*s.* 6*d.*, and in Ireland to 1*s.* each, in 1833) was abolished in 1853.

Early advertisements are found in "Perfect Grammar of every Language," 30 March to 2 April, 1647, and "Mistake in Learning," 4 Oct. 1648.

ADVOCATE, THE KING'S (always a doctor of the civil law), was empowered to prosecute at his own instance certain crimes about 1597. The LORD ADVOCATE in Scotland is the same as the attorney-general in England, with judicial powers.—It was decided in the parliament of Paris, in 1685, that the king's advocate of France might at the same time be a judge; and in Scotland sir William Oliphant (1612) and sir John Nesbit (1666) were lord advocates and lords of session at the same time. Beatson.—The powers were diminished in 1881, when John Blair Balfour was made Lord Advocate; the right hon. J. H. A. Macdonald, 1885-8; Mr. J. P. B. Robertson, 1888-Sept. 1891, succeeded by sir Charles John Pearson, 1891, by Mr. J. B. Balfour, 1892; sir Charles Pearson, Sept. 1895; rt. hon. Mackenzie about 1682; in 1709 it obtained the right to a copy of every new book published in Britain. Number of volumes over 350,000 MSS. over 3,000; see Judge Advocate.

ADVOUSONS, right of a presentation to a church living. First recorded instance in 448, when a bishop was permitted by the council of Orange to nominate a clerk to a church he had built outside his diocese. Advowsons were allowed in the 6th cent. (123 Novel of Justinian). Patronage has grown as part of the feudal system. The Decretals stated that if with the consent of the bishop any man built a church he acquired the right of patronage. In Thomas à Becket's time presentations were often made against the will of the bishop, and for money payments. Exchange of advowsons is now regulated by various Acts, notably 23 & 24 Vict. c. 124, 1860, 31 & 32 Vict. c. 114, and 33 & 34 Vict. c. 39, 1868-70. See Benefice.

ÆDILES. Roman city officers. 1. Two plebeian ædiles were appointed to look after buildings, weights and measures, the supply of provisions, &c., 494 B.C. 2. The ædiles curules were appointed 365 B.C. 3. Julius Cæsar appointed ædiles cæres for watching over the supply of corn. The ædiles became a kind of police under the emperors.

ÆDUI OR HEDUI, a Celtic people, N.E. France, subjugated by Julius Cæsar, B.C. 52. An insurrection, A.D. 21, was quelled by C. Silius.

ÆGATES ISLES, W. of Sicily: near these the Roman consul, C. Lutatius Catulus, gained a victory over the Carthaginian fleet under Hanno, 10 March, 241 B.C. Peace ensued, the Romans obtaining Sicily and a tribute of 3200 talents.

ÆGINA, a Greek island, a rival of Athens, was humbled by Themistocles, 485 B.C.; and taken and its works destroyed 455. Its inhabitants, expelled, 431, were restored by the Spartans, 404; they renewed war with Athens, 388, and made peace, 387. In 1811, from the temple of Pallas Athene, many statues, dating from 50 years before Phidias, were taken to Munich, one group represents a combat of Greeks and Trojans for the body of Achilles.

ÆGOSPOTAMI, (the Goat-rivers), in the Chersonesus, where Lysander, the Lacedæmonian, defeated the Athenian fleet, 405 B.C., and ended the Peloponnesian war.

The ancient oracles frequently gave responses admitting of perfectly contrary interpretations. In Nero's time, the Romans had recourse to this method of concealing truth. The following epitaph on Fair Rosamond (mistress of our Henry II. about 1173) is a mediæval specimen:—"Hic jacet in tomba Rosa mundi, non Rosa munda; Non redolet, sed olet, quæ redolere solet."

Burne-Jones, Mr. (d. 1894) Dante Rossetti and others associated with the Pre-Raphaelite movement (which see). The fantastic extravagances of some of the followers of the cult were cleverly hit off by Gilbert and Sullivan in "Patience," produced in 1881, and satirised in Punch about that period. The influence of Æstheticism has been felt in the improvement of decorative art in modern houses, and increased artistic refinement.

AGAPÆ (agapē, Greek for love, charity), "feasts of charity," referred to 1 Jude 12, and described by Tertullian, of which the first Christians of all ranks as one family partook, as Christ did with his disciples. Disorders creeping in, these feasts were forbidden to be celebrated in churches by the councils of Laodicea (366) and Carthage (390). They are still recognised by the Greek church, and are held in their original form weekly by the Glasites or Sandemanians, and in some degree by the Moravians, Wesleyans, and others.

AGAPEMONE (Greek, "the abode of love"), an establishment at Charlinch, near Bridgwater, Somersetshire, founded in 1845, where Henry James

Prince,* and his deluded followers, formerly persons of property, lived in common, professing to devote themselves to innocent recreation and to maintain spiritual marriage. Meetings of the sect were held at Hamp, near Bridgwater, Dec., 1872. An "abode" at Spaxton (1849) and at Clapton, about 1895. The latter dissolved in 1902 through reprobation of the public. Rev. Smyth-Piggott unfrocked 27 Jan. 1909. See Impostors.

AGAR-TOWN, the name given to a district in St. Pancras parish, N. London. It consisted of hovels, erected on the site of the grounds of councillor Agar, after 1841, which, from their filthy and uncivilised condition, were termed by Charles Dickens, in 1851, the English Connemara. The entire district was cleared by the Midland Railway Company.

AGE. Chronologers have divided the time between the creation and the birth of Christ into ages. Hesiod (735 B.C.) described the Golden, Silver, Brazen, Heroic, and Iron Ages; Ovid (43 B.C.—18 A.D.) omits in his enumeration the Heroic Age; see Dark Ages.

FIRST AGE (from the Creation to the Deluge)	B.C.
SECOND AGE (to the coming of Abraham into Canaan)	4004-2349
THIRD AGE (to the Exodus from Egypt)	2348-1922
FOURTH AGE (to the founding of Solomon's Temple)	1921-1491
FIFTH AGE (to the capture of Jerusalem)	1490-1014
SIXTH AGE (to the birth of Christ)	1014- 588
SEVENTH AGE (to the present time)	588- 4

ARCHÆOLOGICAL AGES. The various stages through which man has passed in the process of development and civilization are divided into the Stone Age—(a) Palæolithic, rough stone cutting tools and weapons; (b) Neolithic, polished stone implements—the Bronze Age (with an Age of Copper in place of, or in addition to, the Age of Bronze), and (c) the Iron Age, the two last characterised by tools and weapons of such materials. No sharply defined chronological division can be made between these Ages, the Stone Age of one area sometimes co-existing with that of the Bronze or Iron Age of another area of the same period.

AGE. In Greece and Rome twenty-five was full age for both sexes, but a greater age was requisite for the holding certain offices: e.g. thirty for tribunes; forty-three for consuls. In England the minority of a male terminates at twenty-one, and of a female in some cases, as that of a queen, at eighteen. In 1547, the majority of Edward VI. was, by the will of his father, fixed at eighteen years; previously to completing which age, his father, Henry VIII., had assumed the reins of government, in 1509.—A male of twelve may take the oath of allegiance; at fourteen he may consent to a marriage, or choose a guardian; at seventeen he may be an executor, and at twenty-one he is of age; but according to the Statute of Wills, 7 Will. IV. & 1 Vict. c. 26, 1837, no will made by any person under the age of twenty-one years shall be valid. A female at twelve may consent to a marriage, at fourteen she may choose a guardian, and at twenty-one she is of age.

AGED PILGRIMS' FRIEND SOCIETY, founded 1807, provides pensions to Protestants over 60 years of age; has three asylums, established 1871, 1879, 1884.

AGINCOURT, OR AZINCOUR (N. France), a village where Henry V. of England, with about 9000 men, defeated about 60,000 French on St. Crispin's day, 25 Oct. 1415. Of the French, there were, according to some accounts, 10,000 killed, including the dukes of Alençon, Brabant, and Bar, the archbishop of Sens, one marshal, thirteen earls, ninety-two barons, and 1500 knights; and 14,000 prisoners, among whom were the dukes of Orleans and Bourbon, and 7000 barons, knights, and gentlemen. The English lost the duke of York, the earl of Suffolk, and about 20 others. St. Rémy asserts with more probability that the English lost 1600 men. Henry V. soon after obtained the kingdom of France.

AGIO, the difference between the real and the nominal value of money.

AGITATORS (or Adjutors), officers appointed by the Parliamentary army in 1647, to take care of its interests: each troop or company had two. The general Cromwell was eventually obliged to repress their seditious power. At a review he seized the ringleaders of a mutiny, shot one instantly, in the presence of his companions and the forces on the ground, and thus restored discipline. Hume.—Daniel O'Connell, the agitator of Ireland, was born in 1775. He began to agitate at the elections in 1826; was elected for Clare, 5 July, 1828; the election being declared void, he was re-elected 30 July, 1829. After the passing of the Catholic emancipation bill, he agitated in vain for the repeal of the union, 1834 to 1843. He died 15 May, 1847.—Richard Cobden and John Bright were the chief Anti-corn-law agitators, 1841-45.—Mr. Bright became a Reform agitator in 1866.

AGNADELLO (N. E. Italy). Here Louis XII. of France gained a great victory over the Venetians, some of whose troops were accused of cowardice and treachery; 14 May, 1509. The conflict is also termed the battle of the Rivolta.

AGNOÏTÈ (from agnoia, Greek, ignorance). I. A sect founded by Theophrastus of Cappadocia about 370: said to have doubted the omniscience of God. II. The followers of Themistius of Alexandria, about 530, who held peculiar views as to the body of Christ, and doubted his divinity.

AGNOSTICS, name given to philosophers who assert that we have no knowledge but what we acquire by means of our senses, about 1876. The Turkish army was divided and broken up, the strong camp taken, with many prisoners, including 7 pashas and 38 guns. The Russian strategy was highly commended. This overwhelming disaster, which led to the investment of Kars, was attributed to Mukhtar's maintaining too extended lines which were turned (20 miles with only 40,000 men: when 200,000 were required).

The sarcophagus is composed of the largest known block of granite without flaw. A meeting to organise a method of receiving contributions for a great national memorial was held at the Mansion-house, 14 Jan. 1862; and a large sum was quickly subscribed. 35,000*l.* had been received on 1 March; 50,220*l.* on 11 June, 1862; and parliament voted 50,000*l.*, in addition to the 60,000*l.* received by voluntary contributions, 23 April, 1863.

ALBERT UNIVERSITY, the name proposed for a new teaching university, in and for London, advocated by University college and King's college in 1891. A draft charter was submitted to the privy council and approved in July, 1891. The subject was eventually referred to a royal commission in March following, and abandoned in favour of increased powers to the university of London. See Gresham College and London University.

ALBIGENSES, a name given to various persons who opposed the doctrines and corruptions of the church of Rome, living at Albi, in Languedoc, and at Toulouse in the 12th century. They were persecuted as alleged Manicheans, 1163, and a crusade (proclaimed by pope Innocent III.) against them commenced in 1207. Simon de Montfort commanded 500,000 men, and at Beziers, 1209, he and the pope's legate put friends and foes to the sword, saying, "God will find his own!"* At Minerva he burnt 150 of the Albigenes alive; and at La Vaur he hanged the governor, and beheaded the chief people, drowning the governor's wife, and murdering other women. He defeated Raymond, count of Toulouse, but was himself killed in 1218. Louis VIII. and IX., kings of France, patronised the crusade; count Raymond was subdued, and abdicated in 1229; and the heretics were given up to the Inquisition. They had little in common with the Waldenses, which see.

ALBION. Britain is said to have been so called by Aristotle (died 322 B.C.). Julius Cæsar and others are said to have given it the name (from albus, white) on account of its chalky cliffs.

ALBUERA OR ALBUHERA, Estremadura, Spain. Here a battle was fought between the French, commanded by marshal Soult, and the British and Anglo-Spanish army, under marshal, afterwards lord Beresford, 16 May, 1811. The allies obtained a brilliant victory. The French loss exceeded 8000 men previously to their retreat; but the allies lost a large number. The chief brunt of the action fell on the British; colonel Inglis, 22 officers, and more than 400 men, out of 570 who had mounted a hill, fell, out of the 57th regiment alone; the other regiments were scarcely better off, not one-third being left standing; "1500 unwounded men, the remnant of 6000 unconquerable British soldiers, stood triumphant on this fatal hill." Napier.

ALBUFERA (Spain, East Central), a lagoon, near which the French marshal Suchet (afterwards duke of Albufera) defeated the Spaniards under Blake, 4 Jan. 1812: this led to his capture of Valencia on 9 Jan.

ALCALA DE HENARES, Spain, the Roman Complutum. At its once famous university founded by cardinal Ximenes, 1510, was printed the Complutensian Polyglot bible, at his expense, 1502-15. Cervantes, the author of "Don Quixote," was born here, 1547.

ALCANTARA, a town on the Tagus, W. Spain. A fine bridge was built here by Trajan, 105. The duke of Alva acquired Portugal for Spain by defeating the Portuguese army here, 24 June, 1580. The Spanish military order of knighthood of Alcantara was established in 1156. The sovereign of Spain has been grand master since 1495. Population, 4000.

ALCAZAR-QUIVER, near Fez, N. W. Africa, where the Moors totally defeated the Portuguese, whose gallant king Sebastian was slain, 4 Aug. 1578. The Portuguese disbelieved his death, and long expected his return; this led to the appearance of five impostors.

ALCHEMY, the forerunner of chemistry; its chief objects being the discovery of the philosopher's stone (which was to effect the transmutation of metals into gold), an alkahest or universal menstruum, and the elixir of life.* The alchemists assert that their founder was Hermes Trismegistus (thrice greatest), an ancient Egyptian king.—Pliny says the emperor Caligula was the first who prepared natural arsenic, in order to make gold of it, but left it off, because the charge exceeded the profit.

Zosimus wrote on the subject about 410.

The Arabians cultivated alchemy, and were followed (in the 13th century) by Roger Bacon, Albertus Magnus, Aquinas, Raymond Lullius, Basil Valentine (born 1394), Paracelsus (died 1541), and others.

In 1404 the craft of multiplying gold and silver was made felony by 5 Hen. IV. c. 4, which act was repealed in 1689.

A licence for practising alchemy with all kinds of metals and minerals was granted to one Richard Carter, 1476. Rymer's Fœdera.

Dr. Price, of Guildford, in 1782 published an account of his experiments and brought specimens of gold to the king, affirming that they were made by means of a red and white powder. Being a fellow of the Royal Society, he was required, under pain of expulsion, to repeat his experiments before Messrs. Kirwan and Wolfe (some say Higgins): but after much equivocation and delay he took poison and died, Aug. 1783.

ALCOHOL. Pure spirit of wine or hydrated alcohol is said to have been obtained by the distillation of fermented liquors by Abucasis in the 12th century; and the dehydration of this liquor to have been partially effected by Raymond Lullius in the 13th century by carbonate of potassium. In 1820, Faraday and Hennell obtained traces of alcohol by passing olefiant gas (bi-carburetted hydrogen) through sulphuric acid; and in 1862 this process was examined and confirmed by Berthelot. Alcohol has been artificially formed from its elements (carbon, hydrogen and oxygen) by chemists; it was solidified by Prof. Dewar at the Royal Institution, 1886; see Distillation, Spirits, Brandy, Gin, Rum. See Temperance.

ALCOLEA (Andalusia, S. Spain). Near the bridge a sharp engagement took place between the royalists under general Pavia y Laey, marquis de Novaliches, and the insurgents under marshal Serrano, 27 Sept. 1868. The former was defeated.

AL-CORAN OR AL-KORAN, see Koran, Mahometanism, &c.

ALDERMAN. The Saxon ealdorman was next to the king, and frequently a viceroy; but after the settlement of the Danes the title was gradually displaced by that of earl. Aldermen in corporations are next in dignity to the mayor. A curious list of aldermen and their wards is assigned to the year 1290. Loffie. Aldermen chosen for life, instead of annually, 17 Rich. II. 1394. Aldermen made justices of the peace, 15 Geo. II., 1741. The council of a borough consists of mayor, aldermen, and councillors, Acts, 1835.

The 26 London (City) aldermen are elected by the wards.

In 1877 the court of aldermen exercised their ancient right of veto against Sir John Bennett (three chosen aldermen for the ward of Cheap), and chose Mr. Edgar Brettitt, 23 Oct. 1877.

Aldermen elected by the councillors form part of the County Councils established by the Local Government Act, 1888, and of the London municipal boroughs, created by the London Government Act, 1899.

ALDERNEY (English Channel), with Jersey, &c., was acquired by William the Conqueror, 1066. The "Race" is celebrated for two fatal occur-remains; William of Normandy, son of Henry I. of England, and many young nobles (120 youths of the principal families of France and Britain), were overtaken by a storm, and all lost, 25 Nov. 1120. The British men-of-war Porphy, of 180 guns and 1160 men, was wrecked here, 5 Oct. 1744; the admiral, sir John Balchen, and all his crew perished. Through this strait the French escaped after their defeat at La Hogue by admirals Russell and Rooke, 19 May, 1752. The construction of a breakwater, in order to make Alderney a naval station, was begun in 1852, and after having cost £3,537,000, was suspended by parliament in 1871. In 1874 the harbours and lands were transferred from the control of the board of trade to that of the admiralty and the war department. See Hants, 30 March, 1890.

ALDERSHOT CAMP, on a moor near Farnham, about 33 miles from London. In April, 1854, the War Office, having obtained a grant of £100,000, purchased 4,000 acres of land for a permanent camp for 20,000 men. The camp, which was at first made up of wooden huts, is now a handsome red brick township, possessing its own public buildings, fire brigade stations, post office, &c., and one of the finest gymnasiums in the country. The demolition of the wooden huts was completed in 1896.

Barracks were erected for the infantry, line cavalry, and several other regiments.

pachalic of Aleppo is one of the five governments of Syria. It was taken by the Saracens, A.D. 638, who restored its ancient name Haleb or Chaleb; by Saladin, 1193; and sacked by Timour, Nov. 1400. Its depopulation by the plague has been frequent; 60,000 persons were computed to have perished by it in 1797; many in 1827. The cholera raged here in 1832. Aleppo suffered severely from the terrible earthquakes in 1822 and 1830; and has often been the scene of fanatical massacres. On 16 Oct. 1850, the Mahometans attacked the Christians, burning everything. Three churches were destroyed, five others plundered, and thousands of persons slain. The total loss of property amounted to about a million sterling; no interference was attempted by the pacha. Population in 1885, 110,000; 1910, (est.) 140,000.

ALESSANDRIA, a city of Piedmont, built in 1168 under the name of Cæsar by the Milanese and Cremonese, to defend the Tanaro against the emperor, and afterwards named after pope Alexander III. They recovered it after the battle of Marengo, 14 June, 1800, and held it till 1814, when the strong fortifications erected by Napoleon were destroyed. These have been restored since June, 1856.

ALEXANDRIAN CODEX, a MS. of the Septuagint translation of the Bible in Greek, said to have been transcribed by a lady named Thecla, in the 6th century, and to have belonged to the patriarch of Alexandria in 1098. ALEXANDRIAN SCHOOLS OF PHILOSOPHY. The first school arose B.C. 323, soon after the foundation of Alexandria. It flourished under the patronage of the Ptolemies till about 30 B.C. It included Euclid (300), Archimedes (287-212), Apollonius (250), Hipparchus (150), and Hero (150). The second school dates from 30 B.C., and lasted till about 640. Its most eminent members were Ptolemy, the author of the Ptolemaic system (150), Diophantus the arithmetician (200), and Pappus the geometer (350).

* The statement that Amron ordered the remains of the library to be burnt is apocryphal. The saying of Omar—"That if the books agreed with the book of God, they were useless; if they disagreed, they were pernicious"—is denied by Mahometans. It is also attributed to Theophrastus, archbishop of Alexandria (390), and to cardinal Ximenes (1599).

ALEXANDRINES, verses of twelve syllables, first written by Alexander of Paris, about 1164, and since called after him. The last line of the Spenserian stanza is an Alexandrine. In Pope's Essay on Criticism, this verse is thus happily exemplified:—

"A needless Alexandrine ends the song,

That, like a wounded snake, drags its slow length along."

In 1494 Luca Pacioli published the first printed book on Algebra in Europe. Some of the algebraic signs were introduced either by Christophe Rudolph (1522-26) or Michael Stifelius of Nuremberg, 1544, and others by Francis Vieta, in 1590, when algebra came into general use. Jerome Cardan published his "Ars Magna," containing his rule, 1545. Thos. Harriot's important discoveries appeared in his "Artis Analytica Praxis," 1631. Descartes applied algebra to geometry about 1637. The binomial theorem of Newton, the basis of the doctrine of fluxions, and the new analysis, 1668. Subsequently Euler, Lagrange, Fourier, Peacock, De Morgan, Sylvester, and Cayley.

The fixed alkalies, potash and soda, decomposed, and the metals potassium and sodium formed, by Humphry Davy at the Royal Institution, London, 1807.

Dr. Ure invented an alkaliometer, 1816.

The manufacture of alkalis, very extensive in Lancashire and Cheshire, is based on the decomposition of common salt (chloride of sodium), by a process invented by a Frenchman named Nicolas Le Blanc, about 1792; his statue set up in Paris, summer, 1885.

Mr. Losh obtained crystals of soda from brine about 1814. Various modifications of these processes are now in use.

"Alkali works" are defined as works for the manufacture of alkali, sulphates of soda, sulphate of potash, and in which muriatic gas is evolved.

Mr. Wm. Gossage's process for condensing muriatic acid gas patented in 1836.

The "ammonia process" of making soda, invented by Dyer and Hemming, in 1838; patents respecting it taken out by Solvay, 1863, 1867, 1872; Gossage, 1854; Schloesing, 1854, 1858; Young, 1871, 1872; Weldon, 1872, 1873; and by others.

Mr. Walter Weldon received the French Lavoisier medal for his most important improvements in the alkali manufacture, July, 1877. He died of overwork, 20 Sept. 1885, aged 53.

In consequence of the injury to vegetation produced by the alkali works in Lancashire and Cheshire, the Alkali Works act "for the more effectual condensation [of 95 per cent.] of muriatic acid gas" (or hydrochloric acid) was passed, 28 July, 1863. It came into operation 1 Jan. 1864, proved successful; was re-enacted, 1868; and amended, 1874, 1881, and 1892. Mr. James Greenwood's electrolytic process for the direct production of caustic soda and chlorine from common salt reported successful, Jan. 1892. See Bleaching Chemical Works and Union.

The English, French, and Turkish army (about 57,000 men) moved out of their first encampment in the Crimea on 19 Sept., and bivouacked for the night on the left bank of the Bulganac. The Stationers' company claimed the exclusive right of publishing almanacs in virtue of letters patent from James I., granting the privilege to them and the two Universities; but the monopoly was broken up by a decision of the Court of Common Pleas in 1775. A bill to renew the privilege was lost in 1779.

The Stamp Duty on English almanacs first imposed in 1770, was abolished in August, 1834; since when almanacs have become innumerable, being issued by tradesmen with their goods.

* Murphy's Almanac for 1833 predicted correctly a frost on 7 Jan.; thaw and frost 14th; severe frost 21st, and then thaw. A great sale of the almanac ensued. Afterwards the predictions failed.

Of Foreign Almanacs, the principal are the "Almanach de France," first published in 1699, the "Almanach de Götting," 1764, in 180 pages; in 1895, 1,162, and the "Livre d'Or des Souverains," by H. R. Hiort-Lorenzen, published in Paris, July, 1895.

ALMANZA (S. E. Spain). Here on 25 April (o. s. 14), 1707, the English, Dutch, and Portuguese forces, under the earl of Galway, were totally defeated by the French and Spanish commanded by James Fitzjames, duke of Berwick (illegitimate son of James II.). Most of the English were killed or made prisoners, having been abandoned by the Portuguese at the first charge.

ALMEIDA (Portugal), a frontier town, captured by Massena, 27 Aug. 1810. The French entered Spain, leaving a garrison at Almeida, blockaded by the English, 6 April, 1811. Almeida was retaken by Wellington (11 May), and Massena retired from Portugal.

ALMENARA, a village N. E. Spain, where on 28 July, 1710, an English and German army defeated the Spanish army supporting Philip V., the grandson of Louis XIV. of France. Stanhope, the English general, killed the Spanish general, Amézaga, in single conflict; an act almost unexampled in modern warfare.

ALMOHADES, Mahometan partisans, followers of Mohammed ben Abdalla, surnamed El-Mehedi, in Africa, about 1120. They subdued Morocco, 1146; entered Spain and took Seville, Cordova, and Granada, 1146-56; and founded a dynasty and ruled Spain till 1232, and Africa till 1278.

ALMONER, an office anciently allotted to a dignified clergyman who gave the first dish from the royal table to the poor, or an alms in money. By an ancient canon all bishops were required to keep almoners. The grand almoner of France was the highest ecclesiastical dignity in that kingdom before the revolution, 1789. Hereditary grand almoner of England, the marquiss of Exeter, 1895. The king's almoner or the sub-almoner distributes the king's gifts on Maudy Thursday (which see).

The Rt. Rev. Lord Alwyne Compton, king's almoner, died 4 April, 1906.

The very Rev. Jos. Armitage Robinson, D.D., Dean of Westminster, appointed to succeed him, 17 May, 1906.

ALMORAVIDES, Mahometan partisans in Africa, rose about 1050; entered Spain by invitation, 1086; were overcome by the Almohades in 1147.

ALMSHOUSES for aged and infirm persons have been erected by many public companies and benevolent individuals, particularly since the abolition of religious houses at the Reformation in the 16th century. A list of them, with useful information, will be found in "Low's Charities of London," 1862; frequently republished.

Geffery's almshouses and garden, Kingsland-road, Shoreditch, sold, the site being bought for the erection of industrial dwellings, April, 1910.

ALNEY, an island in the Severn, near Gloucester. Here a combat is ascertained to have taken place between Edmund Ironside and Canute the Great, in sight of their armies, 1016. The latter was wounded, and proposed a division of the kingdom, the south part falling to Edmund. Edmund was murdered at Oxford shortly after, it is said by Ædric Streon; and Canute obtained possession of the whole kingdom.

ALNWICK (Saxon Ealnwic), on the river Alne in Northumberland, was given at the conquest to Ivo de Vesci. It has long belonged to the Percies. Malcolm, king of Scotland, besieged Alnwick, and he and his sons were killed 13 Nov. 1093. It was taken by David I. in 1136, and attempted in July, 1174, by William the Lion, who was defeated and taken prisoner. It was burnt by king John in 1215, and by the Scots in 1448. Since 1854 the castle has been repaired and enlarged with great taste and at unsparing expense.

ALPACA (or Paco), a species of the S. American quadruped, the Llama, the soft hairy wool of which is now largely employed in the fabrication of cloths. It was introduced into this country about 1836, by the earl of Derby. An alpaca factory (covering 11 acres), with a town, park, almshouses, &c., for the workpeople, was erected at Salthaire, near Shipley, Yorkshire, by Mr. (afterwards sir) Titus Salt in 1852. A statue of him at Bradford was unveiled 1 Aug. 1874. He died 29 Dec. 1876. Salthaire visited by the prince and princess of Wales 22 June, 1882.

The Royal Yorkshire Jubilee Exhibition at Salthaire opened by the Princess Beatrice . . . 6 May, 1887

ALPHABET, so called from the first two Greek letters alpha, beta (Hebrew aleph beth). The statements that Cadmus brought the Phœnician letters from Egypt into Greece are legendary. M. de Rougé about 1859 demonstrated the true origin of the alphabet. Dr. Isaac Taylor's learned work, "The Alphabet," was published May, 1883; he died, aged 72, 18 Oct. 1901.

Nearly 200 alphabets are known, of which about 50 are in use, mostly developed from the Phœnician alphabet itself, said to have been derived from the Egyptian hieroglyphic picture writing; the Roman alphabet was based upon the Greek. The alphabets of the different nations contain the following number of letters:—

English . . . . .	26	Arabic . . . . .	28
French . . . . .	25	Persian . . . . .	32
Italian . . . . .	22	Turkish . . . . .	28

Hebrew . . . . .	22

ALPHONSINE TABLES, astronomical tables, composed by Spanish and Arab astronomers, and collected in 1253 under the direction of Alphonso X. of Castile, surnamed the Wise, who is said to have expended upwards of 400,000 crowns in completing the work; he himself wrote the preface. The Spanish government ordered the work of Alphonso to be reprinted from the best MSS.; the publication began in 1863.

ALPS, European mountains. Those between France and Italy were passed by Hannibal, 218 B.C.; by the Romans, 154 B.C.; and by Napoleon I. May, 1800. Roads over Mont Cenis and the Simplon, connecting France and Italy, were constructed, by order of Napoleon, between 1801-6; see Simplon. The "Alpine Club," which consists of British travellers in the Alps, was founded in 1858, and published its first work, "Peaks, Passes, and Glaciers," 1859; and a journal since. Mr. John Ball, F.R.S., long the able first president, and author of excellent "Guides," died 21 Oct. 1889. See Jungfrau, Matterhorn. An International Alpine Congress opened at Salzburg 14 Aug. 1882.

Alpine Clubs.—Austrian founded, 1862; Swiss, 1863; Italian, 1863; German, 1860, united with the Austrian 1874, and numbers some 40,000 members. The Appalachian Mountain Club of Boston is the principal mountaineering Club in the United States.

Mont Cenis or Col de Fréjus Tunnel.—A tunnel, 7½ miles long through Mont Cenis, connecting Savoy and Piedmont, was proposed by M. Medail, and, after long lying dormant, was discussed and plans drawn up in 1848. The execution was prevented by the war of 1849.

The work of excavation was begun by king Victor Emmanuel, 31 Aug. 1857.

The boring was at first effected by ordinary piercing machinery; steam power was employed in 1860; and latterly compressed air.

Engineers—Grattoni, Grandis, and Sommeiller; the boring was completed, 25 Dec. 1870.

The total cost was about 2,600,000*l.* As the Italians had executed the work within the given time, the French government bore the chief expense.

The first experimental trip was made in 40 minutes, 13 Sept., and the tunnel was solemnly inaugurated by the passage of 22 carriages in 20 minutes, 17 Sept. 1871; regular trains pass through, 16 Oct. 1871.

A railway for locomotives over Mont Cenis was constructed upon Mr. Fell's plan in 1867 (see Railways), and opened for traffic, 15 June, 1868.

The overland mail first travels through the tunnel to Brindisi, saving 24 hours, 5 Jan. 1872.

St. Gothard Tunnel (part of a railway system to connect the North Sea and the Mediterranean), about 9½ miles; compressed air employed in boring; begun June, 1872; completed 29 Feb. 1880; through failure in vaulting, May, 1880, opening deferred.

The first complete train, carrying one hundred passengers, passed through the St. Gothard Tunnel in 50 minutes, 1 Nov. 1881; partially opened 1 Jan. 1882; completely opened June, 1882.

Simplon tunnel, convention for its construction by the Italian and Swiss governments, signed 25 Nov. 1859.

Mr. Hugo Mylius, celebrated alpinist, makes winter ascents of the Finsteraarhorn (14,025 ft.), 12 Feb. 1903, and the Jungfrau (13,670 ft.), 14 Feb. 1903, both on skis; ascends Mt. Blanc (15,784 ft.), with 3 Bernese Oberland guides, temperature 40° below zero Fahr., 25 Feb. 1904.

New Rhätian Railway, begun 1898, opened 27 June, 1903. Scheme of railway to top of Mt. Blanc proposed by M. Vallot, Sept. 1903.

Miss Beatrice Thompson, with Joseph Demarcho, a guide, successfully ascends Mt. Blanc in spite of a heavy fall of snow, May, 1904.

Simplon tunnel—first train of the ordinary passenger service passed through, 25 Jan., 1906; the tunnel formally opened by the king of Italy and the president of the Swiss Confederation, 19 May, 1906.

The balloon, "Milton," piloted by Signor Murillo and Countess Maria Mont Bar, was inflated in Nov. 1866. An attempt was made to sail in the Montebello valley, 1,000 feet above the level of the sea, May, 1866. Aeschbach, the inventor, being full of snow, reported from Villach, Bleiburg, Salzburg, and Belluno; several attempts failed, and March 1866. ### ALRESFORD, battle of, or Cheriton, which see.

ALSACE, ELSSASS, formerly part of the kingdom of Austria, afterwards the French departments of the Upper and Lower Rhine. It was incorporated with the German empire in the 10th century. A portion was restored to France, 1648, and the whole, including Strasburg, in 1697. Alsace was re-conquered by the Germans, Aug.-Sept. 1870, and annexed to their empire, May, 1871; by law, 9 June, 1871. The Alsatians were permitted to choose their nationality, before 30 Sept. 1872. Many emigrated into France, with much regret.—ALSACE-LORENAINE was constituted a province of the German empire, having been ceded by France by the treaty of peace concluded 10 May, 1871, see Belfort. The province sends 15 members to the German parliament. Administrators, prince Bismarck, 1871; field-marshal Manteuffel, 1 Oct. 1879; prince Hohenlohe, July, 1885; prince Hohenlohe-Langenburg, Oct. 1894. Population of Alsace-Lorraine, 1885, 1,504,355; 1890, 1,603,197; 1900, 1,717,451. See Germany, 1887, and Strasbourg. The emperor William II. visited the province 20 Aug. et seq. 1890, and 19 Oct. 1895. The stringent passport regulations greatly relaxed 1 Oct. 1891; the "dictatorship paragraph" repealed 11 May, 1902. Inauguration of the restored Hohkonnigsburg, near Schlettstadt, the emperor William and the empress being present, 13 May, 1908.

ALSATIA, a name given to the precinct of Whitefriars, London, is described in Scott's "Fancies of Nigel." Its privilege of sanctuary was abolished in 1697.

ALSEN (Denmark), besieged by the Prussians, and heroically defended, 26 June; taken, 29 June, 1864.

ALTAR. One was built by Noah, 2348 B.C.; 3154 Hales; 2481 Clinton (Gen. viii. 20); others by Abraham, 1921 (Gen. xii. 8). Directions for making an altar are given, Exod. xx. 24, 1491 B.C. The erection of altars in Greece is mythically assigned to Cecrops. The term "altar" was early applied to the table used in the celebration of the Lord's Supper in Christian churches (Heb. xiii. 10). Since the time of Elizabeth there has been much controversy on the subject, and the Puritans in the civil war destroyed many of the ancient stone altars, substituting wooden tables. In Jan. 1845 it was decided in the Arches Court that stone altars were not to be erected in English churches.

ALTENKIRCHEN (Prussia). The French, who had defeated the Austrians here, 4 June, 1796, were themselves defeated, and their general, Marceau, killed, 16 Sept. following.

ALTER EGO (another or second I), a term applied to Spanish viceroys when exercising regal power; used at Naples when the crown prince was appointed vicar-general during an insurrection in July, 1820.

ALTONA (Holstein, N. Germany), acquired by the Danes, 1660, and made a city, 1664. It was occupied first by the German federal troops, 24 Dec. 1863, and then by the Prussians (the federal diet protesting), 12 Feb. 1864.

ALT-RANSTADT (Prussia), where the treaty of peace dictated by Charles XII. of Sweden, to Frederick Augustus of Poland, was signed, 24 Sept. 1706, o.s. Frederick, deposed in 1704, regained the throne of Poland after the defeat of Charles XII., in 1709.

ALUM, a salt, is said to have been first discovered at Roccha, in Syria, about 1300; it was found in Tuscany about 1470; its manufacture was brought to perfection in England by sir T. Chaloner, who established large alum works near Whitby in 1608; it was discovered in Ireland in 1757; and in Anglesey in 1790. Alum is used as a mordant in dyeing, to harden tallow, and in the paper manufacture.

ALUMBAGH, a palace with other buildings near Lucknow, Oude, India, taken during the mutiny from the rebels, 23 Sept. 1857, and heroically defended by the British under sir James Outram. He defeated an attack of 30,000 sepoys on 12 Jan. 1858, and of 20,000 on 21 Feb., and was relieved by sir Colin Campbell in March.

ALUMINIUM, a metal, the base of the earth alumina, which is combined with silica in clay, and which was shown to be a distinct earth by Margraff in 1754, having been previously confounded with lime. It is very light (sp. g. 2.25), malleable, and sonorous; when pure does not rust, and is not acted on by sulphur or any acid except hydrochloric. Oerstedt in 1826 obtained the chloride of aluminium; and in 1827 the metal itself was got from it by F. Wöhler, but was long a scientific curiosity, the process being expensive. The mode of production was afterwards simplified by Bunsen and others, more especially by H. Ste.-Claire Deville, who in 1856 succeeded in procuring considerable quantities of this metal by the aid of the metal sodium. A cheaper method was devised by Mr. Webster, of Hollywood, near Birmingham, in 1881. Since 1880 by electrolytic methods, as that of Messrs. Cowles of Milton, near Stoke-on-Trent, and of Lockport, in New York, the chemical process has been practically superseded. In March, 1856, it was 3*l.* the ounce; in June, 1857, 1*1*s. or 12*s.*, and it gradually became much cheaper; at the present time, 1905, it is 3*s.* 6*d.* per lb. The eagles of the French colours have been made of it, and many other ornamental and useful articles. Deville's work, "De l'Aluminium," was published in 1859. An aluminium manufactory was established at Newcastle in 1860, by Messrs. Bell. They obtain the metal from a French mineral, bauxite. Their aluminium bronze, an alloy of copper and aluminium, invented by Dr. John Percy, F.R.S., was made into watch cases, &c., by Messrs. Reid of Newcastle, in 1862. Aluminium bronze, which can be manufactured with a textile strength equal to steel, renders it a useful material for field guns; its endurance and resistance to friction, combined with its lightness, adapt it especially for the bearings of shafts and other kinds of machinery. Its cost of production is, however, high. Combined with tin aluminium is used for optical instruments, and alloyed with silver forms a metal named Tiers Argent, from which forks and spoons are manufactured. "Aluminium gold," used for imitation gold jewelry, is an alloy of aluminium with copper. Aluminium entered largely into the construction of the deck of Shamrock III.

A steam launch wholly made of aluminium (alloy), 6 metres long,  $1\frac{1}{2}$  metres wide, was constructed at Zurich by Messrs. Escher, Wyss & Co., Sept. 1892.

An aluminium yacht, Vendeesse, launched on the Seine, 6 Dec. 1893.

The Jules Davoust, 33 feet long, weighs 18 cwt., also exhibited on the Seine, Dec. 1892.

An aluminium torpedo-boat, built by Messrs. Yarrow for the French government, successfully tried at Greenwich, 29 Sept. 1894.

The British aluminium company (registered 1894) establish works at Foyers, and utilize the Falls; reported June, 1896; reservoir works completed, Jan. 1898.

AMADIS OF GAUL, a Spanish or Portuguese romance, stated to have been composed about 1370 by Vasco de Lobeira. It was enlarged by De Montalvo, about 1465; and first printed (in Spanish) 1519; in French, 1540-56. Translation by Southey, 1803.

AMALEKITES (descendants of Amalek, grandson of Esau, brother of Jacob) attacked the Israelites, 1491 B.C., when perpetual war was denounced against them. They were subdued by Saul about 1079, by David, 1058 and 1056; and by the Simeonites about 715 B.C.

AMALFI, a city on the gulf of Salerno, Naples, in the 8th century became the seat of a republic, and flourished by its commerce till 1075, when it was taken by Roger Guiscard, and eventually incorporated with Naples. The Pisans, in their sack of the town in 1135, are said to have found a copy of the Pandects of Justinian, and thus to have induced the revival of the study of Roman law in Western Europe; the story is now doubted. Flavio Gioia, a native of Amalfi, is the reputed discoverer of the mariner's compass, about 1302.

AMATI, a family of celebrated violin makers of Cremona, 16th and 17th centuries. Andrea (1540-1600) founded the business, which was carried on by his sons Geronimo and Antonio and his grandson Nicolo. The last-named was the master of both Guarnerio and Stradivario, whose violins are so highly prized.

AMATONGALAND, between Zululand and the Portuguese possessions, South Africa. The territory annexed to the British possession of Zululand, 30 Nov. 1897.

AMAZON, West India mail steam ship, left Southampton on her first voyage, Friday, 2 Jan. 1852, and on Sunday morning, Jan. 4, was destroyed by fire at sea, about 110 miles W.S.W. of Scilly (ascribed to the spontaneous ignition of combustible matter placed near the engine-room). Out of 161 persons on board, 102 persons must have perished by fire or drowning, 21 persons were saved by the life-boat of the ship; 25 more were carried into Brest harbour by a Dutch vessel passing by; and 13 others were picked up in the bay of Biscay, also by a Dutch galliot. Eliot Warburton, a distinguished writer in general literature, was among those lost.

AMAZON (S. America). The longest river in the world. Navigable for large steam vessels 2,500 miles from the sea. Was discovered by Pinzon in 1500, and explored by Francisco Orellana in 1540. Coming from Peru, he sailed down the Amazon to the Atlantic, and observing companies of women in arms on its bank, he called the country Amazonia, and gave the name of Amazon to the river, previously called Marañon. Steam navigation commenced 1850. There is now a regular service of ocean-going steamers up the Amazon.

AMAZONS. Three nations of Amazons have been mentioned—the Asiatic, Scythian, and African. They are mythically said to have been the descendants of Scythians inhabiting Cappadocia, where their husbands, having made incursions, were all slain, being surprised in ambuscades by their enemies. Their widows formed a female state, and decreed that matrimony was a shameful servitude. Quintus Curtius. They were said to have been conquered by Theseus. The Amazons were constantly employed in wars; and that they might bend the bow with more force, their right breasts were burned off, whence their name from the Greek, a, no, mazos, breast. Others derive the name from maza, the moon, which they are supposed to have worshipped. About 330 B.C. their queen, Thalestris, visited Alexander the Great, whilst he was pursuing his conquests in Asia, with three hundred females in her train. Herodotus. For modern amazons, see Dahomey.

AMBASSADORS. Accredited agents, and representatives from one court to another, are referred to in early ages. In most countries they have great privileges; and in England, they and their servants are secured against arrest. England has nine ambassadors (at Berlin, Constantinople, Madrid, Paris, Rome, St. Petersburg, Vienna, Washington, Tokio), twenty-six ministers, and about thirty chief consuls, resident at foreign courts, exclusive of inferior agents; the ambassadors and other chief agents from abroad at the court of London in 1865 were 47; in 1868, 43; in 1872, 42; in 1878, 39; in 1889, 43; in 1909, 45.

The Russian ambassador being imprisoned for debt by a lace-merchant, 27 July, 1768, led to the passing the statute of 7 Anne, for the protection of ambassadors, 1768.

Two men, convicted of arresting the servant of an ambassador, were sentenced to be conducted to the house of the ambassador, with a label on their breasts, to ask his pardon, and then one of them to be imprisoned three months, and the other fined, 12 May, 1780.

The first minister from the United States of America to England, John Adams, presented to the king, 1 June, 1785; the first from Great Britain to America was Mr. Hammond, in 1791. Mr. Thos. F. Bayard, first U. S. ambassador to London, appointed 1893; died, aged 69, 28 Sept. 1893. Sir Julian Pauncefote (after lord, 1899), British minister, 1889, made ambassador, 1903; died, 24 May, 1904.

A Japanese minister received by queen Victoria, 3 March, 1875.

The first accredited ambassador from China, Kus-ta-Jên, landed at Southampton, 21 Jan. 1877.

In the case of Sir H. Macartney, secretary to the Chinese legation at the Vestry of Marylebone, the Queen's Bench decided that the plaintiff was free from parish rates and taxes, 24 Feb. 1890.

A summons against Nicholas Mori, driver to the United States ambassador, for driving at 40 miles an hour on the Great North Road, was withdrawn, 12 July, 1906.

AMBER, a semi-mineral substance, probably fossil resin, derived from extinct coniferæ. From its property of becoming highly negatively electric by friction the term electricity is derived; elektron being the Greek word for amber. Its use for ornaments is of great antiquity, it is found among the prehistoric remains of the Swiss lake dwellers, and is alluded to in Homer. Theophrastus wrote upon it 300 B.C. Amber was much valued as a charm against witchcraft and disease. It is principally found in the northern parts of Europe.

AMBLEF, near Cologne, Germany. Here Charles Martel defeated Chilperic II., and Ragenfroi, mayor of the Neustrians, 716.

AMBOISE (Central France). A conspiracy of the Huguenots against Francis II., Catherine de Medici, and the Guises, was suppressed at this place in Jan. 1560. On 19 March, 1563, the Pacification of Amboise was published, granting toleration to the Huguenots. The civil war was however soon renewed.

AMBOYNA, chief of the Molucca isles, discovered about 1512 by the Portuguese, but not wholly occupied by them till 1580. It was taken by the Dutch in 1605. The English factors at this settlement were cruelly tortured and put to death, 17 Feb. 1623-4, by the Dutch, on an accusation of a conspiracy to expel them from the island, where the two nations jointly shared in the pepper trade of Java. Cromwell compelled the Dutch to give a sum of money to the descendants of the sufferers. Amboyna was seized by the English, 16 Feb. 1796, but was restored by the treaty of Amiens, in 1802. It was again seized by the British, 17-19 Feb. 1810; and again restored at the peace of May, 1814. Amboyne wood, a beautiful coloured wood, yielded by Pterospermum indicum. The capital almost destroyed by earthquake and 50 persons killed, 5 Jan. 1898.

AMBROSIAN CHANT, see Chant, Liturgy, &c.

AMBULANCE ASSOCIATION, see under John's, St.

The "Bischhoffshelm" ambulance service for London established 30 March 1879.

AMEN, an ancient Hebrew word meaning true, faithful, certain, is used in the Jewish and Christian assemblies, at the conclusion of prayer: see 1 Cor. xiv. 16 (A.D. 59). It is translated "verily" in the Gospels.

AMENDE HONORABLE, in France, in the 9th century, was a punishment inflicted on traitors and seditious persons: the offender was delivered to the hangman: his shirt was stripped off, a rope put round his neck, and a taper in his hand; he was then led into court, and was obliged to beg pardon of God and the country. Death or banishment sometimes followed. These words also denote a recantation in open court, or in presence of the injured person.

AMERCEMENT, in Law, a fine assessed for an offence done, or pecuniary punishment at the mercy of the court: thus differing from a fine directed and fixed by a statute. By Magna Charta, 1215, a freeman cannot be amerced for a small fault, but in proportion to the offence he has committed; the mode was determined by 9 Hen. III., 1225.

AMERICA,* the great Western Continent, is about 9000 miles long, with an area of about 16,500,000 square miles. It is now believed to have been visited by the Norsemen or Vikings in the 10th and 11th centuries; but the modern discovery is due to the sagacity and courage of the Genoese navigator, Christopher Columbus.† "History of the New World called America," by Edw. J. Payne. Vol. 2. 1899. See Chicago.

† Christophoro Colombo was born about 1445 (or between 1435 and 1449); first went to sea about 1460; settled at Lisbon in 1470, where he married Felipa, the daughter of Perestrello, an Italian navigator, whereby he obtained much geographical knowledge. He is said to have laid the plans of his voyage of discovery before the republic of Genoa, in 1485, and other powers, and finally before the court of Spain, where at length the queen Isabella became his patron. After undergoing much ingratitude and cruel persecution from his own followers and the Spanish court, he died on 20 May, 1506, and was buried with much pomp at Valladolid. His remains were transferred, in 1513, to Seville; in 1536 to San Domingo; and in Jan. 1796 to the Havana, Cuba; to Seville, 19 Jan. 1899. The original inscription on his tomb is said to have been "A Castilla y a Leon Nuevo Mundo dio Colon." "To Castile and Leon Colon gave a New World." Humboldt says beautifully, that the success of Columbus was "a conquest of reflection." It was stated in Nov. 1890, that Columbus' log-book had been fished up from the sea.

* The name is derived from Amerigo Vesputius, a Florentine merchant, who died in 1498. He accompanied Ojeda in his voyage on the eastern coast in 1499, and described the country in letters sent to his friends in Italy. He is charged with presumptuously inserting "Tierra de Amerigo" in his maps. Irving discusses the question in the Appendix to the Life of Columbus, but comes to no conclusion. Humboldt asserts that the name was given to the continent in the popular works of Waldseemüller, a German geographer, and the knowledge of Vesputius. To America we are indebted, among other things, for maize, the turkey, the potato, Peruvian bark, and tobacco. See Pilgrimage, 1877.

AMERICA, CENTRAL, REPUBLICS OF, includes Guatemala, San Salvador, Honduras, Nicaragua, and Costa Rica (which see). They declared their independence, Sept. 21, 1821, and separated from the Mexican confederation, 1 July, 1823. The states made a treaty of union between themselves, 21 March, 1847. There has been among them since much anarchy and bloodshed, aggravated greatly by the irruption of American filibusters under Kenny and Walker, 1854-5. In Jan. 1863, a war began between Guatemala (afterwards joined by Nicaragua) and San Salvador (afterwards supported by Honduras). The latter were defeated at Santa Rosa, 16 June, and San Salvador was taken, 26 Oct.; the president of San Salvador, Barrios, fled; and Carrera, the dictator of Guatemala, became predominant over the confederacy. Gen. Barrios, president of Guatemala, attempts the union of the five states, himself to be dictator; opposed by all except Honduras, Feb. He is defeated and killed in a prolonged battle at Chalehuapa, 2 April; peace with the states signed 16 April, 1885. The union of the states, under one principal president, was proposed at the Pan-American Congress, 1889-90. Nicaragua, Salvador and Honduras united as a Central American republic, signed, 28 June, 1895. A constitution established, reported, Aug. 1898. The five states formed into the republic of Central America, autonomy to be preserved, by treaty, signed, 15 June, 1897. Each state resumes its absolute sovereignty, reported 30 Nov. 1898. See Darien and Panama.

AMERICA, RUSSIAN, sold to the United States for about 1,480,000*l.*, March, 1867. See Alaska.

"AMERICA," AND AMERICA CUP, see Yacht.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION FOR THE ADVANCEMENT OF SCIENCE, resembling the British Association, held its first meeting at Philadelphia 20 Sept. 1848; annually since at various big cities.

AMERICAN BASEBALL, a game somewhat resembling rounders, introduced into this country by teams from Philadelphia and Boston in 1875 without success. The American teams (Chicago and All America), after a tour round the world, played a game at Kennington Oval in the presence of the Prince of Wales (late King Edward VII.) and many distinguished spectators, 12 March, 1889, and efforts have subsequently been made to popularize the game in England with little success.

AMERICAN BOOTS, see under Boots.

AMERICAN CLUB, &c., London, for Anglo-Saxons interested in the Western Hemisphere, established autumn 1887. American society in London founded to assist distressed Americans; first dinner, Mr. Bayard, the U.S. ambassador, in the chair, 19 April, 1895.

AMERICAN EXHIBITION, Earl's Court, West Brompton, and West Kensington.

Visited by the prince and princess of Wales 5 May, 1887. Opened by colonel Russell, the president, Lord Ronald Gower, archdeacon Farrar, and others, 9 May. Visited by the Queen, 11 May.

AMERICANISMS: a dictionary of these expressions was compiled by John K. Bartlett, and first published in 1848; 4th edition, 1877. Another by John S. Farmer appeared in 1889.

AMERICANISTS, a name assumed by some persons devoted to the study of the archaeology, ethnology, &c., of North and South America, who held their first international congress at Nancy in July, 1875; one at Luxemburg, Sept. 1877; at Brussels, Sept. 1879; at Madrid, 27 Sept. 1881; Copenhagen, 21 Aug. 1883; Turin, 1886; Berlin, 2 Oct. 1888; Paris, 14 Oct. 1890; Huelva, 7 Oct. (the queen-regent of Spain present), 1892; Stockholm, 3 Aug. 1894.

AMERICAN ORGAN, a free-reed keyed wind instrument, resembling the harmonium, with important differences; the principle was discovered about 1835 by a workman employed by Alexandre of Paris. The invention was taken to America, where instruments were made by Mason and Hamlin, of Boston, about 1868.

AMETHYST, the ninth stone upon the breast-plate of the Jewish high priest, 1491 B.C. It is of a rich violet colour. One worth 200 rix-dollars, having been rendered colourless, equalled a diamond in lustre, valued at 18,000 gold crowns. De Boot.—Amethysts discovered at Kerry, in Ireland, in 1775.

AMIENS, a city in Picardy (N. France); the cathedral was built in 1220. It was taken by the Spanish, 11 March, and retaken by the French, 25 Sept. 1597. The preliminary articles of the peace between Great Britain, Holland, France, and Spain, were signed in London by lord Howkesbury and M. Otto, on the part of England and France, 1 Oct. 1801; and the definitive treaty was subscribed at Amiens, on 27 March, 1802, by the marquis of Cornwallis for England, Joseph Bonaparte for France, Azara for Spain, and Schimmelpenninck for Holland. War was declared again in 1803.—After a conflict, in which the French were defeated, 27 Nov. 1870, the German general Von Goeben entered Amiens, 28 Nov. Population in 1901, 90,038; 1910, (est.) 105,000.

AMMONIA, the volatile alkali, mainly produced by the decomposition of organic substances. Its name is ascribed to its having been procured from heated camels' dung near the temple of Jupiter Ammon in Libya. The discovery of its being a compound of nitrogen and hydrogen is ascribed to Joseph Priestley in 1774. By the recent labours of chemists both the oxide of the hypothetical metal ammonium, and ammonium amalgam, have been formed; and specimens of each were shown at the Royal Institution in 1856 by Dr. A. W. Hofmann, who has done very much for the chemical history of ammonia.

Ammonia gas. An apparatus for the improvement of the voice and lungs, by inhaling combinations of ammonia, hydrogen, &c., invented by Dr. Carter M.D., of Baltimore, 1823. He asserted that this mixture resembles Italian air. The successful effects of inhaling the gas were shown at St. James's Hall, 6 Nov. 1884.

Ammonia gas. A new explosive for use in coal mines, said to be safer than those in use, composed of pure ammonium chloride and sulphuric acid. Experiments with this explosive conducted by Sir George Elliot at the works of the Miners' Safety Explosive Company, Southcliffe House, Essex, were considered very satisfactory, 24 Oct., 1902.

AMMONITES, descended from Ben-Ammi, the son of Lot (1897 B.C.), invaded Canaan and made the Israelites tributaries, but were defeated by Jephthah, 1143 B.C. They again invaded Canaan, intending to put out the right eye of all they subdued; but Saul overthrew them, 1095 B.C. They were afterwards many times vanquished; and Antiochus the Great took Rabbah, their capital, and destroyed the walls, 198 B.C. Josephus.

AMNESTY (a general pardon after political disturbances, &c.) was granted by Thrasylbus, the Athenian patriot, after expelling the thirty tyrants, 403 B.C. Acts of amnesty were passed after the civil war in 1651, and after the two rebellions in England in 1715 and 1745.—After his victorious campaign in Italy, Napoleon III. of France granted an amnesty to all political offenders, 17 Aug. 1859. An amnesty, with certain exemptions, was granted to the vanquished southern states of North America by president Johnson, 29 May, 1865. An amnesty for political offences was granted by the emperor of Austria at his coronation as king of Hungary, 8 June, 1867; a rather sweeping amnesty bill was passed in the United States regarding the rebellion, 10 April, 1871. An amnesty association on behalf of the Fenians was active in Britain, Oct. 1873. 2245 French communists pardoned by decree, published 17 Jan. 1879; many others during the year: a general amnesty for political offences passed by the chamber (333-140) 21 June, 1880. An amnesty was granted to the Cretans after the disturbances, by the Sultan of Turkey, Dec. 1889. To the Boers, 1903.

AMPUTATION, in surgery was greatly aided by the invention of the tourniquet by Morel, a French surgeon, in 1674, and of the flap-method by Lowdham of Exeter in 1679.

AMSTERDAM (Holland). The castle of Amstel was commenced in 1100; the building of the city in 1203. Its commerce was greatly increased by the decay of that of Antwerp after 1609. The exchange was built in 1634; and the noble stadthouse in 1648; the latter cost three millions of guilders, then a large sum. It was built upon 13,659 piles. Amsterdam surrendered to the king of Prussia, when that prince invaded Holland, in favour of the stadtholder, in 1787. The French were admitted without resistance, 18 Jan. 1795. The Dutch government was restored in Dec. 1813. A crystal palace for an industrial exhibition was opened by prince Frederick of the Netherlands, 16 Aug. 1864. AMYLENE, a colourless, very mobile liquid, first procured by M. Balard of Paris in 1844, by distilling fusel oil (potato-spirit) with chloride of zinc. The vapour was employed instead of chloroform first by Dr. Snow in 1856. It has since been tried in many hospitals here and in France. The odour is more unpleasant than chloroform, and more vapour must be used.

ANABAPTISTS, those who baptize at full age, and reject infant baptism; see Baptists. The name was first given to Thomas Münzer, Stork, and other fanatics who preached in Saxony in 1521, and excited a rebellion of the lower orders in Germany, which was quelled with bloodshed in 1525. A similar insurrection took place in Westphalia, headed by Matthias, 1533, and, after his assassination, by John of Leyden, who was crowned "king of Sion" in Münster, 24 June, 1534. Münster was taken in June, 1535; and John was executed 13 Feb. 1536. Several anabaptists were executed in England in 1535, 1538, and 1540. On 6 Jan. 1661, about 80 anabaptists in London appeared in arms, headed by their preacher, Thomas Venner, a wine-cooper. They fought desperately, and killed many of the soldiers brought against them. Their leader and sixteen others were executed, 19 and 21 Jan. Annals of England.

ANAGRAMS, formed by the transposition of the letters of a word or sentence (as army from Mary). Much importance was attached to anagrams by the Jewish Cabalists, the Greek Platonists, and the Puritans. Ingenious examples: the question by Pilate, "Quid est veritas?" (what is truth?) the anagram, "Est vir qui adest" (the man who is here); from "Horatio Nelson," is "Honor est a Nilo" (Honour from the Nile).

ANALYSTS, Society of Public, founded by Professor Redwood, Dr. Dupré, and others, 7 Aug. 1874. Dr. Charles Meymott Tidy, an eminent analyst and toxicologist, died 15 March, 1892. See Adulteration.

ANARCHY (Greek an, no, archos, chief), described Judges xvii. 6, "In those days there was no king in Israel, but every man did that which was right in his own eyes," about B.C. 1406. Anarchy frequently prevailed in ancient times. Similar principles, now termed socialism, have been eminently advanced by P. J. Proudhon 1809–65, to whom is ascribed the maxim, "La propriété c'est le vol." See France, Oct. 1882. Many Anarchists tried and punished in Austria and other countries, 1883 et seq. Anarchists expelled from Switzerland, 1885, but return, and cause much trouble; they held a congress at Ticino Jan. 1891. The modern anarchists declare war against society and all its institutions, and frequently employ dynamite as a destructive agent. An "anarchist album," containing about 500 photographs of anarchists, published by the French government April, 1894. The anarchists term the assassination of M. Carnot an execution, 26 June, 1894. ANATOMY (Greek, cutting up). The human body was studied by Aristotle about 350 B.C., and became a branch of medical education under Hippocrates, about 420 B.C. Erasistratus and Herophilus first dissected the human form, having been previously confined to animals: it is said that they practised upon the bodies of living criminals, about 300 and 293 B.C. Galen, who died about A.D. 200, was a great anatomist. In England, these schools were long supplied with bodies unlawfully exhumed from graves; and until 1832, the bodies of executed murderers were ordered for dissection. * Pope Boniface VIII. forbade the dissection of dead bodies, 1297.—The first anatomical plates, designed by Titian, were employed by Vesalius, about 1538. Leonardo da Vinci, Raphael, and Michael Angelo, studied anatomy. The great discovery of Harvey was made in 1619. William and John Hunter were great anatomists: William died 1783, and John, 1793. Quain's and Wilson's large anatomical plates were published 1842, and Bourguery's great work by Jacob, 1830-55. Comparative anatomy has been treated systematically by Cuvier, Owen, Müller, Huxley, Virchow, Schwann, Haeckel, Agassiz, Burmeister, Carpenter, Flower, Thompson, and others. The practice of anatomy greatly aided by the use of the microscope, 1848. See Köntgen Rays. Mr. Thos. Cooke, founder of Cooke's school of anatomy, &c., died 8 Feb. 1877.—The anatomy of plants has been studied since 1680; see Botany. ANATOMICAL SOCIETY OF GREAT BRITAIN founded 1837.

ANCIENT CONCERTS, or "King's Concerts," London. "The Concert of Antient Music" was established in 1776 by the earls of Sandwich and Exeter, and others. Sir Henry Bishop was sole conductor from 1843 to 1848, when the concerts ceased.

* By 42 Hen. VIII. c. 42 (1544), surgeons were granted four bodies of executed murderers for "anatomies," which privilege was extended in following reigns: but in consequence of the abuses committed by resurrection-men in order to supply the surgical schools (robbing churchyards and exhuming graves), see Burials, a new statute was passed in 1680, which placed the ignominy of dissection by prohibiting that of executed murderers, and made provision for the wants of surgeons by permitting, under certain regulations, the dissection of persons dying in workhouses, &c. The act also appointed inspectors of anatomy, regulated the schools, and required persons practising anatomy to obtain a licence. It repealed the clauses of the act of 1628, which directed the dissection of the body of an executed murderer.

ANCIENT HISTORY commences in the Holy Scriptures 4004 B.C., and in the history of Herodotus about 1687 B.C., and is considered to end with the destruction of the Roman empire in Italy, A.D. 476. Modern history begins with Mahomet (A.D. 622), or with Charlemagne (768).

It was occupied by the French in 1832; evacuated in 1838, and after an insurrection was bombarded and captured by the Austrians, 18 June, 1849. The Marches (comprising this city) rebelled against the Papal government in Sept. 1860. Lamoricière, the papal general, fled to Ancona after his defeat at Castelardo, but was compelled to surrender himself, the city, and the garrison, on 29 Sept. The king of Sardinia entered soon after. Near this city, on 28 July, 1402, Timour or Tamerlane defeated and took prisoner the sultan Bajazet, and is said to have conveyed him to Samarcand in a cage.

ANDALUSIA (S. Spain), a province once part of the ancient Lusitania and Bætica. The name is a corruption of Vandalitia, it having been held by the Vandals from 419 to 429, when it was acquired by the Visigoths. The latter were expelled by the Moors in 711, who established the kingdom of Cordova, and retained it till 1236. Andalusia suffered much by the earthquakes of Dec. 1884.

Art. 1. The High Contracting Parties, having mutually recognised the independence of China and Korea, declare themselves to be entirely uninfluenced by any aggressive tendencies in either country. Having in view, however, their special interests of which those of Great Britain relate principally to China, while Japan, in addition to the interests which she possesses in China, is interested in a peculiar degree politically, as well as commercially and industrially, in Korea, the High Contracting Parties recognise that it will be admissible for either of them to take such measures as may be indispensable in order to safeguard those interests if threatened either by the aggressive action of any other Power, or by disturbances arising in China or Korea, and necessitating the intervention of either of the High Contracting Parties for the protection of the lives and property of its subjects.

Art. 2. If either Great Britain or Japan, in defence of their respective interests as above described, should become involved in war with another Power, the other High Contracting Party will maintain a strict neutrality, and use its efforts to prevent other Powers from joining in hostilities against its ally.

Art. 3. If in the above event any other Power or Powers should join in hostilities against that ally, the other High Contracting Party will come to its assistance, and will conduct the war in common, and make peace in mutual agreement with it.

Art. 4. The High Contracting Parties agree that neither of them will, without consulting the other, enter into separate arrangements with another Power to the prejudice of the interests above described.

Art. 5. Whenever, in the opinion of either Great Britain or Japan, the above-mentioned interests are in jeopardy, the two governments will communicate with one another fully and frankly.

Art. 6. The present Agreement shall come into effect immediately after the date of its signature, and remain in force for five years from that date. In case neither of the High Contracting Parties should have notified twelve months before the expiration of the said five years the intention of terminating it, it shall remain binding until the expiration of one year from the day on which either of the High Contracting Parties shall have denounced it. But if, when the date fixed for its expiration arrives, either ally is actually engaged in war, the alliance shall, ipso facto, continue until peace is concluded.

ANGLO-SAXONS or ANGLES, derive their name from a village near Sleswick, called Anglen, whose population (called Angli by Tacitus) joined the first Saxon freebooters. East Anglia was a kingdom of the heptarchy, founded by the Angles, one of whose chiefs, Uffa, assumed the title of king, 571; the kingdom ceased in 792. See Britain. Cædmon paraphrased part of the Bible in Anglo-Saxon about 680; a translation of the gospels was made by abbot Egbert, of Iona, 721; of Boethius, Orosius, &c., by Alfred, 888. The Anglo-Saxon laws were printed by order of government in 1840.

A professorship of Anglo-Saxon at Oxford was founded by Dr. Richard Rawlinson in 1795; one at Cambridge by Dr. Joseph Bosworth in 1867.

ANGLO-TURKISH CONVENTION, see Turkey, 4 June, 1878.

ANGOLA (S. W. Africa), settled by the Portuguese soon after the discovery, by Diego Cam, about 1484. Loando, their capital, was built 1578. Capt. Cunningham reads a paper before the Royal Geographical Society, in which he describes the condition and progress of the country and its environment, 22 Feb., 1904.

ANGORA, see Ancyra.

ANGOULEME, (the Roman Iculisma), capital of the province of Angoumois, Central France, W., was a bishopric in 260. Angoulême became an independent country about 856; was united to the French crown in 1308; was held by the English, 1360 to 1372, in the reign of Edward III. The count of Angoulême became king of France as Franc's I. in 1515. Population 36,000.

ANHALT, HOUSE OF, in Germany, deduces its origin from Berenthobaldus, who made war upon the Thuringians in the sixth century. In 1606, the principality was divided among the four sons of Joachim Ernest, by the eldest, John-George. Thus began the four branches—Anhalt-Dessau (descended from John-George); Zerbst, extinct, 1793; Pletsgau or Coethen, extinct, 1847; and Bernburg, extinct, 1863 (the last duke died without issue 22 Aug. 1863). The princes of Anhalt became dukes in 1809. Anhalt is an hereditary constitutional monarchy (by law 19 Feb. 1872); population in 1871, 203,437; in 1875, 213,565; in 1885, 248,166; 1890, 271,759; 1900, 316,085; 1905, 328,025. Anhalt joined the North German Confederation, 18 Aug. 1866.

Leopold (born Oct. 1, 1794), became duke of Anhalt-Dessau, 9 Aug. 1817, and of Anhalt-Bernburg, 30 Aug. 1863; died 22 May, 1871.

ANHOLT, ISLAND OF, Denmark, was taken possession of by England, 18 May, 1809, in the French war, on account of Danish cruisers injuring British commerce. The Danes made a fruitless attempt to regain it, 27 March, 1811.

ANILINE, an oily alkaline body, discovered in 1826 by Unverdorben among the products of distillation of indigo. From benzole (which see) Bechamp, in 1856, obtained it by successive treatment with concentrated nitric acid and reducing agents. The scientific relations of aniline have been carefully examined by several chemists, especially by Dr. A. W. Hofmann. It was long known to yield a series of coloured compounds, but it was not till 1856 that Mr. W. H. Perkin showed how a violet oxidation-product (mauve) could be applied in dyeing. Aniline is now manufactured on a large scale for the commercial production of "mauve" and "magenta" (rosaniline) (which see), and several other colouring matters, aniline blue, 1861; violet, 1863; "night" green, &c. The patent of Simpson, Maule, and Nicholson, for aniline colours, was annulled by the house of lords, 27 July, 1866. See Alizarine. Poisoning from the inhalation of aniline vapours, characterised by the bluish colour of the lips, cheeks and ears of the persons affected, is termed Anilism.

Lord Mayor presides at a meeting at the Mansion House to commemorate the jubilee of the discovery in 1856 by Dr. William H. Perkin, F.R.S., of the first coal-tar colour; a Perkin research fund to be established 26 Feb., 1906.

Dr. Perkin receives the honour of knighthood, 18 July 1906.

ANIMALCULES, Leeuwenhoek's remarkable microscopical discoveries were published in the Philosophical Transactions of the Royal Society for 1677; in his "Arcana Naturæ," at Leyden, 1696. The great works of Ehrenberg of Berlin on the Infusorial Animalculæ, &c., were issued 1838-57. Pritchard's Infusoria, ed. 1861, and Mr. W. Savile Kent's Manual of Infusoria, 3 volumes, 1880-2, are valuable. The Rev. W. H. Dallinger, Dr. Drysdale and other distinguished scientists, by their microscopical observations of bacteria and other low forms of life, have greatly increased our knowledge.

ANIMAL MAGNETISM (to cure diseases by sympathetic affection) was introduced by father Hehl, a Jesuit, at Vienna, about 1774, and had its believers in France and England about 1788-89. Hehl for a short time associated with Mesmer, but they soon quarrelled.—Mr. Perkins (who died in 1799) invented "Metallic Tractors for collecting, condensing, and applying animal magnetism;," but Drs. Falconer and Haygarth put an end to his pretensions by performing many wonders with a pair of wooden tractors. Brande. See Mesmerism. Animal magnetism disproved by commissions of the French Academy of Sciences, 1837-8; investigation closed as of a "dead letter," 1840. Remarkable feats were performed by Miss Abbott, "the magnetic lady," at the Alhambra theatre, 14 Nov. et seq. 1891.

ANIMALS. Mr. Martin, M.P., as a senator, zealously laboured to repress cruelty, and in 1824 the Royal Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals was instituted. Its new house in Jermyn-street, London, was founded 4 May, 1869. It opposed vivisection in 1860, in unison with a French society, and in Oct. 1873, offered premiums for improved trucks for conveying cattle. A jubilee congress of this and similar societies met in London 17 June, 1874. Convictions obtained by the society 1835 to June, 1876, 28,269. Convictions in England and Wales, 7,320, 1870; 7,033, 1901; papers bequeathed by Mr. J. H. Leag, Dec. 1912. Annual meetings are held. See Trisection. Mr. Martin's act was passed 1822, and similar acts were passed in 1827, 1835, 1837, 1849, and 1854. Dogs were forbidden to be used for draught in 1839. See Cattle.

"League of Animals' Friends," organized about 1 July, 1874, Carl of Shaftesbury, president. With similar object Mr. Ruskin founded St. George's Guild. The Turkey Bait Society in the northern counties numbered 8,000 members in 1874.

The Animals' Institute, Knightsbridge, distributed prizes for inventions for the relief of horses and other animals, 2 July, 1900.

ANIMISM, the name given to the doctrine propounded by George E. Stahl about 1707, that the soul (anima) is the proper principle of life, "the vital principle," in opposition to materialism, which see. The term animism was given by Dr. Edward B. Tylor in 1869, to the belief in the existence of active spiritual beings common alike among civilized and uncivilized peoples. He lectured on animism (terming it a minimum definition of religion) at the Royal institution, March 1895.

Animism, Hindu, which see. In Bengal, retained as "Animism" in the Indian census of 1901.

ANJOU, a province, W. France, was taken by Henry II. of England from his brother Geoffrey in 1156, their father Geoffrey Plantagenet, count of Anjou, having married the empress Matilda in 1127. It was taken from king John by Philip of France in 1205; was reconquered by Edward III.; relinquished by him at the peace of Brétigny in 1360, and given by Charles V. to his brother Louis with the title of duke. The university was formed in 1340.

5 Louis, duke of Anjou, brother to Henry III. of France, became ruler of Aragon; at one time he favoured the Protestants, and nearly effected marriage to Elizabeth of England, 1581-82; died 1584.

ANJOU or BEAUGÉ, BATTLE OF, between the English and French; the latter commanded by the dauphin of France, 22 March, 1421. The English were defeated: the duke of Clarence was slain by sir Allan Swinton, a Scotch knight, and 1500 men perished on the field; the earls of Somerset, Dorset, and Huntingdon were taken prisoners. Beaugé was the first battle that turned the tide of success against the English.

ANNAM or ANAM, an empire of Asia, to the east of India, nominally subject to China, formerly comprising Tonquin, Cochin China, part of Cambodia, and various islands in the Chinese Sea; said to have been conquered by the Chinese, 234 B.C., and held by them till A.D. 203. In 1406 they reconquered it, but abandoned it in 1428. After much anarchy, bishop Adrian, a French missionary, obtained the friendship of Louis XVI. for his pupil Gia-long, the son of the nominally reigning monarch, and with the aid of a few of his countrymen established Gia-long on the throne, who reigned till his death in 1821, when his son became king. In consequence of the persecution of the Christians, war broke out with the French, who defeated the army of Annam, 10,000 strong, about 22 April, 1859, when 500 were killed. On 3 June, 1862, peace was made; three provinces were ceded to the French, and toleration of the Christians granted. An insurrection in these provinces against the French, begun about 17 Dec. 1862, was suppressed in Feb. 1863. Ambassadors sent from Annam with the view of regaining the ceded provinces arrived at Paris in Sept. 1863, had no success. Cochin China and other provinces were annexed to the French empire by proclamation, 25 June, 1867. Several native Christians were massacred by order of a bonze, July, 1868. Population about 3,000,000, capital Hué. Buddhism, ancestor worship, communal life, and education prevail.

By a treaty concluded 12 March, 1854, at Saigon, the independence of the king of Annam was recognized by France, the ports were opened to commerce, and toleration of the Christian religion was secured.

ANNO DOMINI, A.D., the year of Our Lord, of Grace, of the Incarnation, of the Circumcision, and of the Crucifixion. The Christian era commenced 1 Jan. in the middle of the 4th year of the 194th Olympiad, the 753rd year of the building of Rome, and in 4714 of the Julian period. This era was invented by a monk, Dionysius Exiguus, about 532. It was introduced into Italy in the 6th century, and ordered to be used by bishops by the council of Chelsea, in 816, but was not generally employed or several centuries. Charles III. of Germany was the first who added "in the year of our Lord" to his reign, in 879. It is held that Christ was probably born in the year 4 or 5.

ANNUALS, a name given to richly bound volumes, containing poetry, tales, and essays, by eminent authors, illustrated by engravings, published annually, at first in Germany, and also in London in 1823. The duration of the chief of these publications is here given:

New system of government annuities came into operation 3 June, 1884. Works on annuities were published by De Witt, 1671; De Moivre, 1724; Simpson, 1742; Tables by Price, 1792; Milne, 1815; Jones, 1843; Farre, 1864; Institute of Actuaries, 1872 and 1882-7.

Some authors assert that in 550, dying persons, and persons in extreme danger of death, were anointed with consecrated oil, and that this was the origin of Extreme Unction (one of the sacraments of the Roman Catholic Church).

APOLLINARISTS, followers of Apollinaris, a reader in the church of Laodicea, who taught (366) that the divinity of Christ was instead of a soul to him; that his flesh was pre-existent to his appearance upon earth, and was sent down from heaven, and conveyed through the Virgin; that there were two sons, one born of God, the other of the Virgin, &c. These opinions were condemned by the council of Constantinople, 381.

APOLLO, the god of the fine arts, medicine, music, poetry, and eloquence, had many temples and statues, particularly in Greece and Italy. See Delphi. The statue of Apollo Belvedere, discovered at Antium, in Italy, in 1503, was purchased by pope Julius II., who placed it in the Vatican.

APOSTOLICAL, see Canons and Fathers.

The first 50, compiled 5th century, only were recognised by the Roman Church; the 35 canons, put forth 6th century, were received by the Greek Church. Tradition ascribes both the Constitutions and the Canons to Clement of Rome.

APOSTOLICI, a sect, at the end of the 2nd century, which renounced marriage, wine, flesh, &c. A second sect, founded by Sagarelli about 1261, wandered about, clothed in white, with long beard, dishevelled hair, and bare heads, accompanied by women called spiritual sisters, preaching against the growing corruption of the church of Rome, and predicting its downfall. They renounced baptism, the mass, purgatory, &c., and by their enemies were accused of gross licentiousness. Sagarelli was burnt alive at Parma in 1300, and his followers were dispersed in 1307, and extirpated about 1404.

APOTHECARY (literally, a keeper of a store-house). On 10 Oct. 1345, Edward III. settled sixpence per diem for life on Coursus de Gangeland, Apothecarius London, for taking care of him during his severe illness in Scotland. Rymer's Fœdera; see Pharmacy and Medical Council.

APPEAL or ASSIZE OF BATTLE. By the old law of England, a man charged with murder might fight with the appellant, thereby to make proof of his guilt or innocence. In 1817, a young maid, Mary Ashford, was believed to have been violated and murdered by Abraham Thornton, who, on trial, was acquitted. In an appeal, he claimed his right by wager of battle, which the court allowed; but the appellant (the brother of the maid) refused the challenge, and the accused was discharged, 16 April, 1818. This law was struck off the statute-book by 59 Geo. III. c. 46 (1819).

In 1631 lord Ræ impeached Mr. David Ramsey of treason and offered battle in proof. A commission was appointed, but the duel was prohibited by king James I.

APPEALS. In the time of Alfred (890-901), appeals lay from courts of justice to the king in council. Courts of appeal at the Exchequer Chamber, in error from the judgments of the superior and criminal courts, were regulated by statutes in 1357, 1359, 1830 and 1848. Appeals from English tribunals to the pope were first introduced about 1151, were long vainly opposed, and were abolished by Henry VIII. 1534; restored by Mary, 1554; again abolished by Elizabeth, 1559. House of Lords sat as court of appeal in 1278. By 14 Edw. III. c. 5, 1340, a prelate, two earls, and two barons formed the court. Protest by House of Commons against appeal to the Lords, 1675, resisted by the peers; hearing of appeals resumed, 1677. The principle that this jurisdiction was a delegation by the crown of its final authority was reaffirmed 1876. See Prize Council and Justices, Lords, Common Pleas.

APPENDICITIS was abstracted as a separate cause of death for the first time in 1901, previous to which it was classed under the head of enteritis. APPLES. Several kinds are indigenous to England; but those in general use have been brought at various times from the continent. Richard Harris, fruiterer to Henry VIII., is said to have planted a great number of the orchards in Kent, and lord Scudamore, ambassador to France in the reign of Charles I., planted many of those in Herefordshire. Ray reckons 78 varieties of apples in his day (1683). In 1903 there were some 2000 varieties cultivated in Great Britain. The scientific study and classification of apples is entitled Pomology.

APPORTIONMENT ACT (for rents, annuities, dividends, and other periodical payments) passed 1 Aug. 1870.

APPRAISERS. The valuation of goods for another was an early business in England; and so early as 1283, by the statute of merchants, or of Acton Burnel, "it was enacted that if they valued the goods of parties too high, the appraisers should take them at such price as they have limited." In 1845 their annual licence was raised from 10s. to 40s. A duly licensed auctioneer or house agent may act as appraiser.

APPRENTICES. Those of London were obliged to wear blue cloaks in summer, and blue gowns in winter, in the reign of queen Elizabeth, 1558. Ten pounds was then a great apprentice fee. From twenty to one hundred pounds were given in the reign of James I. Stow's Survey. The apprentice tax enacted 43 Geo. III. 1802. The term of seven years, not to expire till the apprentice was 24 years old, required by the statute of Elizabeth (1563), was abolished in 1814. An act for the protection of apprentices, &c., was passed in 1851. The apprentices of London have been at times very riotous; they rose into insurrection against foreigners on Evil May-day (which see), 1 May, 1517.

APPROPRIATION ACT passed annually by a clause prohibits the treasury officials from applying public money to any service other than that to which it has been specially appropriated. The principle was adopted by the commonwealth, and was definitely established in 1665.

APPROPRIATION CLAUSE, of the Irish Tithe Bill of 1835, brought forward by lord John Russell, whereby any surplus revenue that might accrue by the working of the act was to be appropriated for the education of all classes of the people. The principle was adopted by the commons, but rejected by the lords in 1835 and 1836, and was abandoned.

APPROPRIATIONS (property taken from the church) began in the time of William I. The parochial clergy, then commonly Saxons, were impoverished by the bishops and higher clergy (generally Normans) to enrich the monasteries possessed by the conqueror's friends. Where the tithes were so appropriated, the vicar had only such a competency as the bishop or superior thought fit to allow. Pope Alexander IV. complained of this as the bane of religion, the destruction of the church, and a poison that had infected the whole nation. Lay appropriations began after the dissolution of the monasteries, 1536.

APTERYX (wingless), a bird, a native of New Zealand, first brought to this country in 1813, and deposited in the collection of the earl of Derby. Fossil specimens of a gigantic species of this bird (named Dinornis) were discovered in New Zealand by Mr. Walter Mantell in 1843 and since, and much studied and many papers written on it by Professor Owen.

APULIA, a province in S.E. Italy. The people favoured Hannibal, and were severely punished by the Romans at his retreat, 207 B.C. Apulia was conquered by the Normans, whose leader Guiscard received the title of duke of Apulia from pope Nicholas II. in 1059. After many changes of masters, it was absorbed into the kingdom of Naples, in 1265. Strike riot, conflict with troops at Candela, 5 deaths, 3 Sept. 1902.

AQUACULTURE, see under Fisheries.

AQUARIUM, a sect said to have been founded by Tatian in the 2nd century, who forebore the use of wine even in the sacrament; during persecution they met secretly at night. For this they were censured by Cyprian (martyred, 258).

AQUARIUM or AQUAVIVARIUM, a vessel containing water (marine or fresh) in which animals and plants may co-exist, mutually supporting each other; snails being introduced as scavengers. In 1849, Mr. N. B. Ward succeeded in growing seaweeds in artificial sea-water; in 1850, Mr. R. Warington demonstrated the conditions necessary for the growth of animals and plants in jars of water; and in 1853 the glass tanks in the Zoological Gardens, Regent's Park, were set up by Mr. D. Mitchell. The great aquarium (50 yards long and 12 wide) at the Jardin d'Acclimatation at Paris, was constructed under his direction in 1860. He also constructed the aquarium at Hamburg and others. That at Brighton was inaugurated by prince Arthur, 30 March, and publicly opened by the mayor, 10 Aug. 1872. That at the Crystal Palace was opened Jan. 1872.

The ROYAL AQUARIUM and SUMMER AND WINTER GARDEN SOCIETY was established 1874; the building at Westminster was opened by the duke of Edinburgh, 22 Jan. 1876, closed 1902.

AQUATINT, see Engraving.

AQUEDUCT, an artificial watercourse. Appius Claudius Cæcus, while censor, advised and constructed the first Roman aqueduct, as well as the Appian way, about 312-308 B.C.* There are now some remarkable aqueducts in Europe: that at Lisbon is of great extent and beauty; that at Segovia has 129 arches; and that at Versailles is three miles long, and of immense height, with 242 arches in three stories. The stupendous aqueduct on the Ellesmere canal, in England (1,007 feet in length, and 126 feet high), was completed by T. Telford, and opened 26 Dec. 1805. The Lisbon aqueduct was completed in 1738, and the Croton aqueduct, near New York, was constructed between 1837 and 1842. The aqueduct to supply Marseilles with water was finished in 1847. Other important aqueducts: Manchester (nearly 100 miles) 1894; Glasgow (35 miles) 1860 (another 1895); Liverpool (63 miles) 1892; Vienna (60 miles) 1873; Bombay (65 miles) 1892.

AQUIDABAN, Paraguay. Here the war with Brazil was ended with the defeat and death of president Lopez, 1 March, 1870.

AQUIDABAN, a Brazilian battleship of 5090 tons, lost by an explosion in the powder magazine at the port of Jacarepagna. The ship sank and 214 men perished, 21 Jan. 1906.

AQUILA, S. Italy. Near here the Arragonese under the condottiere Braccio Forte-Braccio were defeated by the allied Papal, Neapolitan, and Milanese army under Jacob Caldora, 2 June, 1424. Braccio, a wounded prisoner, refused to take food, and died, 5 June.

* Remains of these and other noble aqueducts, constructed by emperors, still remain, and some supply water to the city.

AQUILEIA (Istria), made a Roman colony about 180 B.C. and fortified A.D. 168. Constantine II. was slain in a battle with Constans, fought at Aquileia towards the close of March, 340. Maximus defeated and slain by Theodosius, near Aquileia, 28 July, 388. Theodosius defeated Eugenius and Arbogastes, the Gaul, near Aquileia, and remained sole emperor, 6 Sept. 394. Eugenius was put to death, and Arbogastes died by his own hand, mortified by his overthrow. St. Ambrose held a synod here in 381. In 452 Aquileia was almost totally destroyed by Attila the Hun, and near it in 489 Theodoric and the Ostrogoths totally defeated Odoacer, the king of Italy. Aquileia was an early patriarchal see.

AQUITAINE, the Roman province Aquitania (S.W. France), conquered by the Romans 28 B.C.; by the Visigoths, A.D. 418; taken from them by Clovis in 507. Henry II. of England obtained it with his wife Eleanor, 1152. It was erected into a principality for Edward the Black Prince in 1362; but was annexed to France in 1370. The title of duke of Aquitaine was taken by the crown of England on the conquest of this duchy by Henry V. in 1418. The province was lost in the reign of Henry VI.

ARABIA (W. Asia). The terms Petræa (stony), Felix (happy), and Deserta are said to have been applied to its divisions by Ptolemy, about A.D. 140. The Arabs claim descent from Ishmael, the eldest son of Abraham, born 1910 B.C. (Gen. xvi.). Arabia was unsuccessfully invaded by Gallus, the Roman governor of Egypt, 24 B.C. The Abyssinians conquered part of Arabia Felix, and retained it 76 years. In A.D. 622, the Arabians, under the name of Saracens, followers of Mahomet (born at Mecca, 570), their general and prophet, commenced their course of conquest; see Mohometanism. Arabia was conquered by the Ottomans 1518-39. The Arabs greatly favoured literature and the sciences, especially mathematics, astronomy, and chemistry. The Koran was written in Arabic (622-632). The Bible was printed in Arabic in 1671. See Wahabees.

ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS (or One Thousand and One Nights) were translated into French by Galland, and published in 1704; but their authenticity was not acknowledged till many years after. The best English translation from the Arabic is that of Mr. E. W. Lane, published in 1839, with valuable notes and beautiful illustrations. Sir Richard F. Burton's elaborate translation in 10 vols. was printed at Benares for subscribers 1873-7. Lady Burton's expurgated edition, edited by Mr. Justin H. McCarthy, with scholarly notes and appendices, was published in 1887 of vol. 7; she died 22 March, 1896. He died, aged 69, 20 Oct. 1897. "The Personal and One Days" (inferior to the "Nights"); a translation from the Persian by Petrus de la Croix, was published in 1710.

ARAGON, part of the Roman Tarraconensis, a kingdom, N.E. Spain, was conquered by the Carthaginians, who were expelled by the Romans about 200 B.C. It became an independent monarchy in A.D. 1035; see Spain.

ARAM. Aramea, from the Hebrew Aram (signifying "high land" as distinguished from Canaan, "low land"), a name given to all the country N.E. of Palestine, which included Syria, Babylonia and Mesopotamia. The people used two dialects, in the west Syriac, in the east Aramaic (improperly termed Chaldee), called Hebrew at the time of Christ.

ARANJUEZ (Central Spain), contains a fine royal palace, at which several important treaties were concluded. On 17 March, 1808, an insurrection broke out here against Charles IV. and his favourite, Godoy, the prince of the peace, who received that title for concluding the treaty of Basle. The former was compelled to abdicate in favour of his son, Ferdinand VII., 19 March.

ARARAT, a mountain in Armenia (about 17,112 feet above the sea-level), on which Noah's ark is supposed to have rested, B.C. 2348, now termed by the Persians, Koh-i-Nuh (Noah's mountain); by the Armenians, Masis; by the Turks, Agri-Dagh.

It was named by Dr. Parrot, in Sept. 1826, by Major Stewart, 1846, and by others since. Mr. James Bryce, who ascended it in Sept. 1877, described the summit as a little table, 1300 feet in extent, and associate, with a bluish-green soil, some 1000 feet in extent, with a bluish-green soil. Associated to Professor Macdonell and M. P. de la Rive, Ararat, 1877, by Mr. H. F. B. Lynch and Capt. Lynch, 1877, 1878.

ARAU CANIA, a province in S. America. Its inhabitants maintained almost unceasing war with the Spaniards from 1537 to 1773, when their independence was recognised. They are now nominally subject to Chili.

ARAUSIO (now ORANGE), S. E. France. Through the jealousy of the Roman proconsul Q. Servilius Cæpio, who would not wait for the arrival of the army of the consul C. Manlius, both were defeated here by the Cimbric with much slaughter, 105 B.C.

ARBELA. The third and decisive battle between Alexander the Great and Darius Codomanus decided the fate of Persia, 1 Oct. 331 B.C., on a plain in Assyria, between Arbela and Gaugamela. The army of Darius consisted of 1,000,000 foot and 40,000 horse; the Macedonian army amounted to only 40,000 foot and 7000 horse. Arrian. The gold and silver found in the cities of Susa, Persepolis, and Babylon, which fell to Alexander from this victory, amounted to thirty millions sterling; and the jewels and other precious spoil, belonging to Darius, sufficed to load 20,000 mules and 5000 camels. Plutarch.

ARBITRATION. Submission to arbitration was authorised and made equivalent in force to the decision of a jury by 9 & 10 Will. III. (1698). Further enforced by 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 42 (1833); see Ouzel Galley. The Common Law Procedure Act (1854) authorises the judges of superior courts to order compulsory arbitration; and, by an act passed in 1859, railway companies may settle disputes with each other by arbitration. The Arbitration (Masters and Workmen) Act was passed 6 Aug. 1872. See Prud'homme.

Mr. Lloyd George, representing the board of trade, addressed the railway dispute of 1897, at a meeting between Mr. Lloyd George and a committee of railway chairmen, the chief point of discussion was that relating to the formation of a board of conciliation, consisting of an equal number of representatives of the companies and the men as a permanent body, with an independent chairman. 1 Nov.; the executive of the Amalgamated Society of Railway Servants accept the scheme of conciliation as an honourable settlement, 7 Nov. 1907.

The President of the board of trade proposes the establishment of a standing court of arbitration under the powers given by the Conciliation Act of 1896, and notifies the Chambers of Commerce and Employers' and Workmen's associations by memorandum, 1 Sept. 1907.

A scheme for conciliation and arbitration, arising out of the threatened railway strike of the autumn of 1907, results in the proposal to form boards for each railway, consisting of representatives of the company and of the men, to consider any question relating to rates of wages and hours of work. It was further provided that questions which these boards were unable to settle were to be referred to a single arbitrator, 6 Nov. 1907.

The London and North-Western Railway were the first company to complete their arrangements in connection with the scheme. The arbitration of Sir E. Fry, based upon evidence submitted to him during eight days' sitting during December 1908, affected the interests of 39,000 men; the award made a number of concessions to various grades, but, on the other hand, wages in some cases were actually reduced in accordance with the company's proposals, and various claims put forward in the men's "National Programme" were entirely disallowed by the arbitrator. The award, which comes into force on 1 April, 1909, and remains binding until the end of 1912, was published 3 Feb. 1909.

Lord Gorell declares his award on questions at issue between the Great Eastern railway company and their employees; the award operates from 24 Sept. 1909, and is binding until the end of 1913, 19 Aug. 1909.

Sir Alfred Bateman's award in respect of the wages and hours of drivers and fireman on the N. Staffordshire railway, make no changes in wages and does not concede the eight hours day, but gives the drivers and firemen time-and-a-half for all work between midnight on Saturday and midnight on Sunday instead of time-and-a-quarter as at present, and also allows time-and-a-quarter instead of time only for all work on week days beyond the ten hours day. The award operates from 1 April, 1910, and continues to 31 Dec. 1913. Times, 1 Feb. 1910.

ARBORICULTURE. See Trees.

ARBUTUS. The Arbutus Andrachne, oriental strawberry-tree, was brought to England from the Levant about 1724.

ARC DE TRIOMPHE, Paris, begun in 1806 in honour of the Grande Armée, continued in 1823, and completed in 1830. The list of battles, &c. (158), begins with Volny, 20 Sept. 1792, and the last Ligny, 16 June, 1815. The Arc de Triomphe is 165 feet high, 150 feet broad and 75 feet thick.

ARCADES, or walks arched over. In London: the Burlington-arcade, opened 20 March, 1819; the Lowther-arcade, Strand, opened 1831, closed 1902; between Old Bond-street and Albemarle-street, opened May, 1880. The Royal-arcade, Dublin, opened June, 1820, was burnt to the ground, 25 April, 1837.

ARCADIA, in the centre of the Peloponnesus, Greece, named after Arcas, a king. The Arcadians regarded their nation as the most ancient of Greece. The early history of Arcadia is fabulous.

Sir Philip Sidney's Arcadia, a pastoral romance, was published in 1590, the 8th edition in 1633.
Magna Grecia, in S. Italy, said to have been colonised by Arcadians under Cénorotus, about 1710 B.C.; and under Evander B.C. 1240
Arcas taught his subjects agriculture and to spin wool. 1514

Supremacy of Sparta (acknowledged 560) abolished by the Thebans; Megalopolis founded by Epaminondas 371
The Arcadians make alliance with Athens, and are defeated by Archidamus 367
Arcadia, having joined the Achaean league, on its suppression is annexed by Rome 146

ARCADIANS, an ultra-conservative French political club, composed of a section of the majority in the chambers, and opposed to liberal measures, even when emanating from the emperor (such as the new press law). It derived its name from Rue de l'Arcade, where its meetings were held: Feb. 1868.

ARCH. It appears in early Egyptian and Assyrian architecture. The oldest arch in Europe is probably in the Cloaca Maxima, at Rome, constructed under the early kings, about 588 B.C. The Chinese bridges, which are very ancient, are of great magnitude, and are built with stone arches similar to those that have been considered a Roman invention.*—The TRIUMPHAL arches of the Romans formed a leading feature in their architecture. The arch of Titus (A.D. 80), that of Trajan (114), and that of Constantine (312), were magnificent. The arches in our parks in London were erected about 1828. The Marble Arch, which formerly stood before Buckingham Palace (whence it was removed to Cumberland-gate, Hyde Park, in 1851) was modelled from the arch of Constantine; see Hyde Park.

ARCHÆOPTERYX (ancient bird); the name given to the earliest known remains of a bird, found in the lithographic slate of Solenhofen by Herman von Meyer and Dr. Häberlein in 1861. Its structure approximated more to that of a reptile than that of modern birds does. It was described by Owen in 1863.

ARCHANGEL (N. Russia), a city, is thus named from a monastery founded here, and dedicated to St. Michael in 1584. The passage to Archangel was discovered by the English navigator Richard Chancellor in 1553, and it was the only seaport of Russia till the formation of the docks at Cronstadt, and foundation of St. Petersburg in 1703. The dreadful fire here, by which the cathedral and upwards of 3000 houses were destroyed, occurred in June, 1793. Increased commercial development under gov. Engelhardt; Alexandrovsk, a new ice-free port, opened by the grand duke Vladimir, 6 July, 1899. Population of the province, 1886, 328,819; 1897, 346,530.

ARCHBISHOP (Greek archiepiscopus), a title given in the 4th and 5th centuries to the bishops of chief cities, such as Rome, Alexandria, Antioch, and Constantinople, who presided over the other metropolitans and bishops in the districts attached to those places. The word is first found in the Apology against the Arians by Athanasius, who died 373. Four archbishops of the Eastern church are styled patriarchs. Riddle.

Before the Saxons came to England, there were three archbishops: London, York, and Caerleon-upon-Usk; but soon after St. Augustine settled the metropolitan see at Canterbury, 602; see Canterbury. York continued archiepiscopal; but London and Caerleon lost the dignity; see St. David's.

The bishoprics in Scotland were under the jurisdiction of the archbishop of York until the erection of the archiepiscopal sees of St. Andrews and Glasgow in 1470 and 1491; these last were discontinued at the Revolution; see Glasgow and St. Andrews.

The bishop of Brechin was chosen Primus, 1886, the title being conferred on one of the bishops by election.

The rank of archbishop was early in Ireland: see Ferns. Four archbishops were constituted, Armagh, Cashel, Dublin, and Tuam (until then the archbishop of Canterbury had jurisdiction over the Irish as well as English bishops, in like manner as the archbishop of York had jurisdiction over those of Scotland), 1151.

Of these four archbishoprics two were reduced to bishoprics (Cashel and Tuam) conformably with the stat. 3 & 4 Will. IV., by which also the number of sees in Ireland was to be reduced from twenty-two to twelve (see Bishops, Cashel, Tuam, Pallium, &c.), 1833.

ARCH-CHAMBERLAIN. The elector of Brandenburg was appointed the hereditary arch-chamberlain of the German empire by the golden bull of Charles IV. in 1356, and in that quality he bore the sceptre before the emperor.

ARCH-CHANCELLORS were appointed under the two first races of the kings of France

* The bridge of Chester, whose span is 200 feet, was commenced in 1829. The central arch of London Bridge is 152 feet; and the three cast iron arches of Southwark Bridge, which rest on massive stone piers and abutments are, the two side ones 210 feet each, and the centre 240 feet: thus the centre arch exceeds the admired bridge of Sunderland by four feet in the span, and the long famed Rialto at Venice, by 127 feet: see Bridges.

(118-986), and when their territories were divided, the archbishops of Mentz, Cologne, and Treves became arch-chancellors of Germany, Italy, and Arles.

ARCHDEACON, a name early given to the first or eldest deacon, who attended on the bishop without any power; but since the council of Nice, his function has become a dignity above a priest. The appointment in these countries is referred to the eighth century. There were seventy-five archdeacons in England (1878) in 1905. The archdeacon's court is the lowest in ecclesiastical polity; an appeal lies from it to the consistorial court by 24 Henry VIII. (1532).

ARCHERY is ascribed to Apollo, who communicated it to the Cretans.

Ishtar "became an archer" (Gen. xxi. 20), B.C. 1892

The victories of Crécy (1346), Poitiers (1356), and Agincourt (1415), were won chiefly by archers.

Four thousand archers of the king surrounded the houses of Parliament ready to shoot; pacified by the king, 21 Richard II. (Spec.) 1397

The citizens of London formed into companies of archers in the reign of Edward III.; and into a corporate body by the style of "The Fraternity of St. George," 29 Henry VIII. 1538

The long bow was six feet long, and the arrow three feet; the usual range from 100 to 500 yards. Robin Hood is said to have shot from 600 to 800 yards. The cross-bow was fixed to a stock, and discharged with a trigger.

ARCHES, COURT OF, the most ancient consistory court, chiefly a court of appeal from inferior jurisdictions within the province of Canterbury; it derives its name from the church of St. Mary-le-Bow (Sancta Maria de Arcubus), London, where it was formerly held, and whose top is raised on stone pillars built archwise. Cowell. Appeals from this court lie to the judicial committee of the privy council, by statute, 1832. The Dean and Official Principal, Dr. Stephen Lushington (appointed in 1828), resigned 1 July, 1867; succeeded by sir Robert J. Phillimore, who resigned, 1875. Lord Penzance succeeded him; resigned, 1899; died 9 Dec. 1899; succeeded by sir Arthur Charles, who, 2 Mar. 1902, was succeeded by Dr. L. T. Dibden, appointed 1903.

ARISTOTELIAN PHILOSOPHY: the most comprehensive ever devised by man. Aristotle was born at Stageira (hence termed the Stageirite), 384 B.C.; was a pupil of Plato from 364 to 347; became preceptor of Alexander, son of Philip of Macedon, in 342; and died in 322. He divided the circle of knowledge into metaphysics and logic, physics (including part of the science of mind), and ethics. His philosophy was too much exalted by the schoolmen during the middle ages, and too much depreciated after the Reformation. His works on natural science contain a vast collection of facts and an extraordinary mixture of sound and chimerical opinions. To him is attributed the assertion that nature abhors a vacuum, an opinion now maintained by eminent modern philosophers.

An Aristotelian Society, for the systematic study of philosophy, was founded in the spring of 1880; Dr. Shadworth H. Hodgson, president.

M. Barthélemy St. Hilaire's complete translation of Aristotle, 35 vols., published early in 1891.

A papyrus containing the lost treatise of Aristotle on the "Constitution of Athens," discovered in Egypt and conveyed to the British Museum, was published by the trustees, with a preface and notes by Mr. F. G. Kenyon, Jan.; and photographs of the MS. were published March, 1891; prof. J. E. Sandys's elaborate edition, Jan. 1893. The work was hitherto only known by extracts in ancient writers. The MS. was considered genuine by M. Barthélemy St. Hilaire, March, 1891.

A family tomb, discovered at Eretria, in the island of Eubœa, by Dr. Charles Waldstein, early in 1891, was considered by him to be really that of Aristotle and his family.

ARMENIAN ERA, commenced on 9 July, 552; the ecclesiastical year on 11 Aug. To reduce this last to our time, add 551 years and 221 days; and in leap years subtract one day from 1 March to 10 Aug. The Armenians used the old Julian style and months in their correspondence with Europeans.

ARMILLARY SPHERE, an astronomical instrument composed of brass circles disposed in such a manner that the greater and lesser circles of the sphere may be seen in their natural position and motion. It is said to have been invented by Eratosthenes, about 255 B.C.; and was employed by Tycho Brahe and others.

ARMINIANS, or REMONSTRANTS, derive their former name from James Arminius (or Harmensen), a Protestant divine of Leyden, Holland (died 19 Oct. 1609); the latter name from his followers having presented a Remonstrance to the states-general in 1610. They separated from the Calvinists, objecting to their views respecting predestination, &c. Their doctrines were condemned in 1619, at the synod of Dort (a which see); they were exiled till 1625. The Calvinists were sometimes styled Gomarists, from Gomar, the chief opponent to Arminius. James I. and Charles I. favoured the Arminian doctrine.

ARMORIAL BEARINGS became hereditary in families at the close of the 12th century. They were employed by the crusaders, 1100. The lines to denote colours in arms, by their direction or intersection, were invented by Columbiere in 1639. The armorial bearings of the English sovereigns are given under the article England. Armorial bearings were taxed in 1798, and again in 1808. The tax produced 64,515*l.* in the year ending 31 March, 1868; 1872, 64,228*l.*; 1876, 83,527*l.*; 1878, 83,104*l.*; 1879, 81,854*l.*; 1881, 79,014*l.*; 1882, 79,196*l.*; 1901-2, 74,703*l.*; 1903-4, 74,545*l.*; 1905-6, 74,118*l.*; 1906-7, 73,122*l.*; 1907-8, 72,984*l.*; 1908-9, 72,930*l.* (collected by the imperial officers). The tax is now 2*l.* 2*s.*; if not on carriages, it is 1*l.* 1*s.* annually (1905). Sir Bernard Burke's "General Armory," 1883, contains the arms of above 66,000 British families, &c. Sir Roper Lethbridge, in his "Golden Book of India," describes the early armorial bearings of the Indian princes, especially the Rajputs, 1893.

ARMORICA, now Brittany, N. France, was conquered by Julius Cæsar, 56 B.C. Many Gauls are said to have retired there and preserved the Celtic tongue, A.D. 584. A colony of West Britons settled in Armorica in the latter part of the 4th century, hence the modern name Brittany, which see.

ARMOUR. That of Goliath is described (about 1063 B.C.) 1 Sam. xvii. 5. Skins and padded hides were early used, and brass and iron armour, in plates or scales, followed. The body armour of the Britons was skins of wild beasts, exchanged, after the Roman conquest, for the well-tanned leathern cuirass. Tacitus. Hengist is said to have had scale armour, A.D. 449.

ARMS BILLS, for the repression of crime and insurrection in Ireland, were passed 1807, 1810, 1823, 1829, and 15 Oct. 1831. The guns registered under the last act at the close of the first year scarcely amounted to 3000, and the number was equally small of all other kinds of arms. The new Arms bill, passed 22 Aug. 1843, has been since renewed, but was not rigidly enforced till 1867. Another Arms bill brought into the Commons, "An act to amend the law relating to the carrying and possession of arms, and for the preservation of public peace in Ireland," to last till 1 June, 1886; Royal Assent, 21 March, 1881. Act renewed till 31 Dec. 1887, 4 June, 1886. See Ireland.

ARMY. Ninus and Semiramis had armies amounting to nearly two millions of fighting men. Diodorus. The first guards and regular troops as a standing army were formed by Saul, 1093 B.C. 1 Sam. xiii. 2. The army of Xerxes invading Greece is said to have been 1,700,000 foot and 80,000 horse: 480 B.C. One of the first standing armies of which we have any account, is that of Philip of Macedon. The army which Darius opposed to Alexander the Great (332 B.C.) is set down as between 750,000 and a million. The first standing army which existed as such, in modern times, was maintained in France by Charles VII. in 1445. The chief European nations have had in their service the following armies: Spain, 150,000 men; Great Britain, 310,000; Prussia, 350,000; Turkey, 450,000; Austria, 500,000; Russia, 500,000, and France, 1,000,000. Estimated number in Europe in 1863, 6,000,000 soldiers, 1,000,000 horses, 11,000 guns. The European powers are still increasing their war armies. Estimated to consist of 12,000,000 men in 1910.

The peace establishments of European Armies are as follows:—

ARMY, BRITISH, mainly arose in the reign of Charles II. in 1661, in consequence of the extinction of feudal tenures. The first five regiments of British infantry were established between 1633 and 1680. James II. established several regiments of dragoon guards (1685-8). In 1685 the army consisted of 7000 foot and 1700 cavalry. The Militia then consisted of about 130,000 men, horse and foot. Standing armies were introduced by Charles I. in 1638; they were declared illegal in England, 31 Car. II. 1679; but one was then gradually forming, which was maintained by William III. 1689, when the Mutiny Act was passed. Grose's "History of the British Army" was published in 1801. See Regiments, Recruiting, Militia, and Volunteers.

Territorial and Reserve Forces Act, reorganizing the army into First and Second line, the latter being composed of the militia, volunteers, and yeomanry, passed 23 July, 1907.

NEW SCHEME OF ARMY REORGANISATION announced by Mr. Arnold-Forster, Secretary for War, in the House of Commons. Scheme proposes to divide the regular army into two parts (1) a general service army, to serve at home, the men enlisting for 9 years with the colours, and 3 years in the first-class reserve; (2) a home service army to serve at home in peace, and abroad in time of important war, composed of 600 battalions, serving 2 years with the colours and 6 years in the first class reserve; linked-battalion service was to be abolished, 14 battalions and 5 garrison batteries to be gradually suppressed, and a force of some 15,000 to be maintained always ready at Aldershot as a "striking" force; the 4 army corps are abolished to be known in future as "commands" (1. Aldershot, 2. Southern, 3. Irish, 4. Eastern, with 3 district commands, North-Eastern, North-western, Scottish); the recommendation of the royal commission on militia and volunteers for a measure of conscription is waived, the volunteers to be reduced to 180,000 men, divided into a body of 60,000 men more highly trained, and one of 120,000 men as reserve battalions with a lower standard of efficiency. The net result claimed for these changes being 185 battalions of regular infantry with a large reserve. Changes in the artillery to follow the lines of the infantry proposals, assigning 100 batteries to general service and 70 to home service; no change at present contemplated for the engineers, or specific proposals for the cavalry and militia. ["Particulars regarding the proposed army organisation scheme" appears in a parliamentary paper of date 1 Aug. 1904] . . . . . 14 July, "

ARMY OF OCCUPATION. By treaty, signed 20 Nov. 1815, the allied powers established the boundaries of France, and occupied certain fortresses for three years.—Franco-Prussian War, 1870-1. The departure of the German army of occupation began about 20 Sept. 1871; completed 16 Sept. 1873.

lost about 700 killed and wounded, 10 April, 1868. The British had 20 wounded.

ARPAID DYNASTY, see Hungary.

ARPINUM (now Arpinum, S. Italy), the birth-place of Cicero, 3 Jan. 106 B.C.; many remains still bear his name.

ARQUEBUS, see Fire Arms.

ARQUES (N. France). Near here the league army, commanded by the duc de Mayenne, was defeated by Henry IV. 21 Sept. 1589.

ARRACAN, a province of N.E. India. Arracan, the capital, captured by the Burmese, 1783, was taken from them by general Morrison, 1 April, 1825. The subjugation of the province followed, 1826.

ARRAIGNMENT consists in reading the indictment by the officer of the court, and calling upon the prisoner to say whether he is guilty or not guilty. He must not be in fetters, unless it be made necessary by apprehended violence. Before the question is answered, all legal exceptions or objections are to be stated. If he fails, or refuses to plead, a jury is sworn to determine, if he is mute of malice or by visitation of God, whether he is able to plead and understand the course of his trial, whether he is insane. If the prisoner is found to be insane, so as to be unfit to plead, the court orders his detention during his Majesty's pleasure, otherwise the court directs entry of a plea of not guilty and the clerk proceeds to call and swear the jury. On a plea of guilty, the court proceeds to judgment. A previous conviction must not be mentioned on arraignment. Formerly, persons who refused to plead in cases of felony were pressed to death by weights placed upon the breast. A person standing mute was declared convicted by an act passed 1772; but in 1827, the court was directed to enter a plea of "not guilty" in such cases; see Mute.

ARRAS (N. E. France), the country of the ancient Atrebrates, the seat of a bishop since 390. Here a treaty was concluded between the king of France and duke of Burgundy, when the latter abandoned his alliance with England, 21 Sept. 1435. Another treaty was concluded by Maximilian of Austria with Louis XI. of France, whereby Burgundy and Artois were given to the dauphin as a marriage portion, 23 Dec. 1482. Velly. Arras was held by the Austrians from 1493 till 1640, when it was taken by Louis XIII.

ARRAY. On 23 Dec. 1324, Edward II. directed the bishop of Durham to make "arraier" his men of arms, horse and foot, and cause them to proceed to Portsmouth; thence to proceed to the war in Gascony. Rymer's Fœdera. Hallam says that this was the earliest commission of array that he could find, and that the latest was dated 1557. The attempt of Charles I. to revive commissions of array in 1642, founded on a statute of Henry IV., was strenuously opposed as illegal.

ARRERS OF RENT ACT, Ireland, May, 1882; 45 & 46 Vict. c. 47, passed 18 Aug. 1882.

ARSACIDÆ, a Parthian dynasty, began with Arsaces about 250 B.C., and ended with Artabanus, killed in battle with Artaxerxes, the founder of the Sassanidæ, A.D. 226.

ARSENIANs, partisans of Arsenius, patriarch of Constantinople, who excommunicated the emperor Michael Palæologus for blinding his colleague the young John Lascaris, 1261, and was deposed 1264.

ARSENIC, a steel-grey coloured brittle mineral, extremely poisonous, known in early times. Brandt, in 1733, made the first accurate experiments on its chemical nature. The heinous crimes committed by its means induced the legislature to enact regulations for its sale, 1851.

Much illness and many deaths in Manchester and Liverpool and district due to arsenic (Oct.-Nov.) found in certain kinds of beer, and finally traced back to glucose and invert sugar made from impure sulphuric acid, containing arsenic; enormous quantities of contaminated beer destroyed; see Times, 20 Dec. 1900; royal commission (Lord Kelvin and others) appointed, Feb. 1901; first report, preventive measures recommended, 24 July, 1901; meeting held to consider the outbreak of arsenical poisoning at Halifax (Dec. 1901), 11 April, 1902.

ARSON, punished with death by the Saxons still remained a capital crime on the consolidation of the laws in 1827 and 1837. By the act of 1861 it is punishable by penal servitude for life and minor degrees of imprisonment. William Anthony was convicted of arson, having set many houses on fire, for the sake of obtaining the reward for giving alarm, 13 Dec. 1871. There were many incendiary fires in Kent, Suffolk, and other counties in 1830; about 14 at Farthinghoe, in S. Northamptonshire, Aug., Sept., 1896, further fires 11 Oct., 14 Jan., 1897.

(See Fires and Trials.)

ARSOUF (Syria). At a battle here Richard I. of England, commanding the Christian forces, reduced to 30,000, defeated Saladin's army of 300,000

Saracens and other infidels, on 6 Sept. 1191. Ascalon surrendered, and Richard marched towards Jerusalem, 1192.

ART ACT, facilitating the public exhibition of works of art (lent to the president of the privy council), passed April, 1806. See Arts, Exhibitions, and National Portrait Gallery.

ARTEMISIUM, a promontory in Eubœa, near which indecisive conflicts took place between the Greek and Persian fleets for three days; 480 B.C. The former retired on hearing of the battle of Thermopylæ.

ARTESIAN WELLS (from Artesium, now Artois, in France, where they frequently occur) are formed by boring through the upper soil to strata containing water which has percolated from a higher level, and which rises to that level through the boring tube. The fountains in Trafalgar-square and government offices near have been supplied since 1844 by two of these wells (393 feet deep). At Paris the Grenelle well (1798 feet deep), was completed in 1841, after eight years of exertion, by M. Mulot at an expense of about 12,000*l.*; and the well at Passy, which it is said will supply sufficient water for nearly 500,000 persons, was begun in 1855, and completed in 1860 by M. Kind. Artesian wells are now common. Many London breweries, clubs, printing offices have deep wells; these need lowering from time to time as their number increases. That at the Reform Club is 345 feet in depth. Artesian wells, some 4,000 feet in depth, are much used for irrigation purposes in W. Australia. Amongst recently completed wells of interest might be mentioned that at New Lodge, Windsor Forest, which reaches a depth of 1,243 feet. Another well bored to provide water for the Bovington Military Camp in Dorset reaches a depth of 726 feet, and is capable of raising 3,000 gallons per hour (completed 1907). Also a well recently bored at the Bank of England reaches a depth of 400 feet, and yields a minimum supply of 150,000 gallons per day (completed 1907).

ARTHUR, king of Britain, said, mythically, to have lived A.D. 500—532.

The events of his life and the conflicts of the knights of his round table, as sung by the Welsh poets Taliesin, Llywarch Hen, and Aneurin, were incorporated into his Latin history by Geoffrey of Monmouth, about 1115, who died 1143; put into French verse by Geoffrey Gaimar, and by Wace soon after; and set forth in an English poem called Brut by Layamon, about 1205. Walter Map by incorporating in his version the legend of the Holy Graal, introduced the religious element about 1171. Sir Thomas Malory's "Morte d'Arthur," printed by Wm. Caxton . . . 1485

ARTICHOKES are said to have been introduced from the East into Western Europe in the 15th cent. and to have reached England in the 16th.

ARTICLES OF RELIGION. On 8 June, 1536, after much disputing, the English clergy in convocation published "Articles decreed by the king's highness" Henry VIII., who published in 1539 the "Statute of Six Articles," decreeing the acknowledgment of transubstantiation, communion in one kind, vows of chastity, private masses, celibacy of the clergy, and auricular confession. Offenders were punishable as heretics. In 1551 forty-two were prepared, and published in 1553. These were modified by the convocation, and reduced to THIRTY-NINE in Jan. 1563; and they received the royal authority and the authority of parliament in 1571. The Lambeth Articles, of a more Calvinistic character, proposed by archbishop Whitgift, were withdrawn in consequence of the displeasure of queen Elizabeth, 1595. One hundred and four Articles were drawn up for Ireland by archbishop Usher in 1614; but in 1635 the Irish church adopted the English articles. See Perth Articles. The 39 Articles were ordered to be removed from the studies at Oxford in Nov. 1871.

ARTICLES OF WAR were decreed in the time of Richard I. and John. Those made by Richard II. in 1385 appear in "Grose's Military Antiquities." The articles of war now in force are based upon an act, passed by William III. in 1689, to regulate the army about to engage in his continental warfare.

ARTIFICERS AND MANUFACTURERS. Their affairs were severely regulated by the statutes of labourers, 1349, 1350, 1360, 1549, and especially of 1562. They were prohibited from leaving England, and those abroad were outlawed, if they did not return within six months after the notice given them. A fine of 100*l.*, and imprisonment for three months, were the penalties for seducing them from these realms, by 9 Geo. II. (1736) and other statutes. The law was modified in 1824; see Artisans, Workmen, &c.

ARTILLERY, a term including properly all missiles, now restricted to cannon. A small piece was contrived by Schwartz, a German cordelier, soon after the invention of gunpowder, in 1330. Artillery was used, it is said, by the Moors of Algeciras, in Spain, in 1343; and according to some historians, at the battle of Crecy, in 1346, when Edward III. had four pieces of cannon. We had artillery at the siege of Calais, 1347. The Venetians employed artillery against the Genoese at sea, 1377. Voltaire. Said to have been cast, with mortars for bomb-shells, by Flemish artists, in Sussex, 1543. Rymer's Fœdera. Made of brass 1635; improvements by Browné, 1728; see Cannon, Bombs, Caronades (under Carron). Mortars, Howitzers, Petards, Rockets, Fire-arms. The Royal Artillery-regiment was established in the reign of Anne.

HONOURABLE ARTILLERY COMPANY of London.—The company incorporated by Henry VIII. for military exercise and better defence of the realm, with special privileges, 25 Aug. 1537. Obtained lease of the Tessel ground, Bishopsgate, from the last prior of the convent of St. Mary, Spittle, for thirce 99 years—afterwards known as the old artillery ground, 3 Jan. 1540. Obtained lease of the "new" artillery ground, Finsbury, their present head-quarters, 1641. In the civil war, 1642-8, the company, as a body, took no part, but most of the officers of the Trained Bands were also members of the company. James, duke of York, afterwards James II., appointed captain-general, 1660. The company ordered to take precedence next after the regular forces, 1 June, 1683. The company numbered 1200 in 1803 and 800 in 1861. Since 1842 the officers have been appointed by the queen. On the decease of the duke of Sussex in 1843, the prince consort became captain-general and colonel. He died 14 Dec. 1861, and the prince of Wales was appointed his successor, 24 Aug. 1863. 350th anniversary celebrated by a grand review, 11 July, 1887. ASHBURTON TREATY, concluded at Washington, 9 Aug. 1842, by Alexander lord Ashburton, and John Tyler, president of the United States: it defined the boundaries of the respective countries between Canada and the state of Maine, settled the extradition of criminals, &c.

ASHDOD, or AZOTUS, seat of the worship of the Phœnician god, Dagon, which fell down before the ark of the Lord, captured by the Philistines from the Israelites, about 1141 B.C. (1 Sam. v.). Ashdod was taken by the Egyptians after 29 years' siege, the longest recorded, B.C. 630. Herodotus.

ASHDOWN, or ASSENDUNE, now thought to be Aston, Berks, where Ethelred and his brother Alfred defeated the Danes in 871. At Ashdown, near Saffron-Walden, Essex, Canute defeated Edmund Ironside with great slaughter, 1016.

Tradition says that the day after the battle in 871 Alfred caused his army to carve the figure of a white horse, the standard of Hengist, in the vale. Mr. Thomas Hughes ("Tom Brown"), in his book "The Scouring of the White Horse" (1859), describes the work and festival on 17 and 18 Sept. 1857, a ceremony performed at intervals from time immemorial. Records are found of the "scouring" in 1755, 27 May, 1776, 15 May, 1780, 1785, 1803, 1812 or 1813, 1825, 19, 20 Sept., Sept. 1843, frequently since.

ASHMOLEAN MUSEUM (books, manuscripts, coins, &c.) was presented to the university of Oxford by Elias Ashmole, the herald and antiquary, and opened 1682. It included the collections of the Tradescants, to whom he was executor. He died at Lambeth in 1692. Dr. C. D. Fortnum presented his art collections and a sum of money to found the new galleries, about 1888; he died, 6 March, 1899. The Ashmolean Society, Oxford (scientific), was established in 1828.

ASHTAROTH, a Phœnician goddess, occasionally worshipped by the Israelites (see Judges ii. 13) about 1406 B.C., and even by Solomon, about 984 B.C. (1 Kings xi. 5.) Greek, Astarte.

ASH-WEDNESDAY, the first day of Lent, which in early times began on the Sunday now called the first in Lent. It is said that pope

Felix III., in 487, first added the four days preceding the old Lent Sunday, to raise the number of fasting days to forty; that Gregory the Great (pope, 590) introduced the sprinkling of ashes on the first of the four additional days, and hence the names of Dies Cinerum, or Ash-Wednesday. At the Reformation this practice was abolished, "as being a mere shadow, or vain show." Ash-Wednesday, 1803, 15 Feb.; 1804, 24 Feb.; 1805, 9 Feb.; 1811, 1 March; 1812, 23 Feb.; 1813, 7 Feb.; 1814, 27 Feb.; 1815, 20 Feb.; 1816, 8 March.

ASIA, the largest division of the globe; part of it was so called by the Greeks. The area of Asia and its islands is estimated at 17,255,800 square miles. Asia was the first quarter of the world peopled: here the law of God was first promulgated; here many of the greatest monarchies of the earth had their rise; and hence most of the arts and sciences have been derived. Its early history is derived from the Bible and from Herodotus, who relates the wars of Croesus, Cyrus, and others. The Central Asian Railway from the Caspian to Samarcand constructed by general Annenkoff for Russia, which now possesses very great influence over the country, opened 1888; branch line to Bokhara completed. See Population, Jews, China, India, Persia, Turkey, and the other countries.

ASIA MINOR, now ANATOLIA, comprised the Ionian colonies on the coast, the early seats of Greek civilisation, and the countries Mysia, Phrygia, Lycia, Bithynia, Caria, Lydia, Cappadocia, Galatia, &c., with the cities Troy, Ephesus, Smyrna (all which see). From the time of the rise of the Assyrian monarchy, about 2000 B.C., to that of the Turks under Osman, Asia Minor was the battlefield of the conquerors of the world.

ASIATIC SOCIETIES. The "Asiatic Society of Bengal," at Calcutta, was established by sir William Jones in 1784, "the bounds of its investigation to be the geographical limits of Asia." The "Royal Asiatic Society," which has several branches in India, was founded in 1823. It established the "Oriental Translation Fund," in 1828, which had published 83 volumes of Eastern literature in 1865. The Fund ceased to exist in 1878. The Fund was revived in a new form mainly by Mr. F. F. Arbuthnot, 1896.

ASKESEAN SOCIETY (from the Greek askesis, exercise), instituted in March, 1796, by some young men for discussing philosophical subjects. Its founders were Wm. Allen, Wm. Phillips, Alex. Tilloch, Luke Howard, W. H. Pepsys and others. In 1806 it merged into the Geological Society.

ASPERN, GREAT, a town, and Essling, a village near the Danube and Vienna, where a series of desperate conflicts took place between the Austrian army under the archduke Charles, and the French under Napoleon, Massena, &c., on 21-22 May, 1809, ending in the retreat of Napoleon. The Austrian loss exceeded 20,000 men, and the French 30,000. Marshal Lannes, mortally wounded 22 May, died 31 May. The bridge of the Danube was destroyed, and Napoleon's retreat endangered; but the success of the Austrians was fruitless to them.

ASPHALT, a solid bituminous substance, probably derived from decayed vegetable matter. It was used as a building material in ancient Babylon. Its application for this purpose was revived by Eirinus, a Greek physician, who discovered beds of it near Neuchâtel in 1712. Asphalt stone was found at Seyssel near Geneva in 1802; and after several failures, count Sassenay brought it into use for pavement about 1832. The artificial asphalt obtained from gas-works began to be used as pavement about 1838. Claridge's patent asphalt was laid down in Trafalgar-square, Jan. 1864. Various kinds of asphalt pavement have been since laid on in London.

ASPRONTE, Naples. Here Garibaldi was defeated, wounded, and taken prisoner 29 Aug. 1862, having injudiciously risen against the French occupation of Rome.

ASSAM (N. E. India) acquired by the British in 1825, and surrendered by the king of Ava in 1826. The tea-plant was discovered here by Mr. Bruce in 1823. A superintendent of the tea-forests was appointed in 1836, the cultivation of the plant having been recommended by lord William Bentinck in 1834. The Assam Tea Company, by whom Chinese labourers and coolies were introduced, was established in 1839. After several years, the plantations suffered severely, it is said through over speculation and neglect of the labourers; as a remedy a labour act was passed at Calcutta, about July, 1867; labour and emigration act passed, 1901. ASSASSINATION PLOT to kill William III., formed by some of the Jacobites, simultaneously with one for an insurrection to be aided by French invaders, in 1696. James II. and several noblemen and others were said to be privy to it, including the earl of Ailesbury. About forty ruffians undertook to kill William near Turnham Green, Middlesex, when returning from hunting, 14 Feb. 1696. Information was given to William by Mr. Prendergast, a Roman Catholic, through horror of the crime. The following were executed:—Charnock, King, and Keyes, 18 March; sir John Friend and sir Wm. Parkyns, 3 April; Rookwood, Lowick, and Cranbourne, 29 April, 1696; sir John Fenwick (by attainder), 28 January, 1697. Sir George Barclay, a chief organiser of the plot, escaped to France.

ASSASSINS, or ASSASSINIANS, fanatical Mahometans, collected by Hassan-ben-Sabah, and settled in Persia about 1090. They murdered the marquis of Montferrat in 1192, Lewis of Bavaria in 1213, and the khan of Tartary in 1254. They were extirpated in Persia about 1258, and in Syria about 1272. The chief of the corps was named "Ancient of the Mountain," and "Old Man of the Mountain." They trained up young people to assassinate such persons as their chief had devoted to destruction. Hénault. From them came the word assassin. See Mafia, Anarchy, and Vehmic Tribunals.

ASSAY OF GOLD AND SILVER, originated with the bishop of Salisbury, a royal treasurer in the reign of Henry I. Du Cange. But certainly some species of assay was practised as early as the Roman conquest. Assay early established in England was regulated by statutes, 1258, 1700, and 1705. Assay masters appointed at Newcastle, 1701; Sheffield and Birmingham, 1773. The laws respecting assay were amended in 1854 and 1855. The alloy of gold is silver and copper, that of silver is copper. Standard gold is 2 carats of alloy to 22 of fine gold. Standard silver is 18 dwts. of copper to 11 ozs. 2 dwts. of fine silver; see Goldsmiths' Company and Trye.

ASSAYE (E. Indies). The British army, under general Arthur Wellesley (afterwards duke of Wellington), entered the Mahratta states on the south; took the fort of Ahmednuggur, 12 Aug., and defeated Scindiah and the rajah of Berar at Assaye, 23 Sept. 1803. This was Wellesley's first great battle, in which he opposed 40,000 with only 9,600 men. The enemy fled, leaving their artillery, &c.

ASSEMBLY OF (130) DIVINES, held at Westminster, 1 July, 1643, convoked by order of parliament to consider the liturgy, government, and doctrines of the church. Two members were elected for each county. The presbyterian majority adopted the Scottish covenant, and drew up the directory for public worship, a confession, and the catechisms now used by the church of Scotland. The last (1163rd) meeting was on 22 Feb. 1649; see Church of Scotland.

ASSENT, see Royal Assent.

ASSESSED TAXES. By some the date is referred to Ethelbert, in 991; to Henry VIII. 1522; and to William III. 1689, when a land-tax was imposed; see Land Tax. The assessed taxes yielded in 1815 (the last year of the war), exclusively of the land-tax, 6,524,766*l.*, their highest amount. These imposts have varied in their nature and amount, according to the exigencies of the state. They were considerably advanced in 1797 and 1801, et seq., but reduced in 1816, and in subsequent years. An act for the repeal of certain assessed taxes was passed 16 & 17 Vict. c. 90, 20 Aug. 1853, explained and amended by 17 & 18 Vict. c. 1, 17 Feb. 1854.—Acts for the better securing and accounting for the Assessed and Income Taxes, 10 Aug. 1854; see Taxes, and Income Tax. Changes were made in the assessed taxes, their time of collection, &c., by the Revenue act, passed 24 June, 1869. Licences for servants, dogs, and armorial bearings were also introduced. An act to provide for uniformity in the assessment of rateable property in the metropolis was passed 9 Aug. 1869. The "Court of General Assessment" first met 19 May, 1870. See House Duty and Land Tax.

ASSIENTO, a contract between the king of Spain and other powers, for furnishing the Spanish dominions in America with negro slaves, began with the Flemings. By the treaty of Utrecht, 13 July, 1713, the British government engaged to furnish 4800 negroes annually to Spanish America for thirty years. The contract was renewed in 1748, but given up in 1750; see Guinea.

ASSIGNATS, a forced paper currency, ordered by the National Assembly of France to support public credit during the revolution, April, 1790. At one period, eight milliards, or nearly 350 millions of pounds sterling, of this paper were in circulation in France and its dependencies. Alison. Assignats were superseded by mandats in 1796.

ASSISTANT MASTERS' ASSOCIATION, founded 1891, holds annual meetings in London and provinces.

ASSIZE OF BATTLE, see Appeal.

ASSIZE OF BREAD, &c., see Bread, and Wool.

ASSIZE OF JERUSALEM, a valuable code of laws compiled under the direction of Godfrey of Bouillon, king of Jerusalem, in 1100.

ASSIZE COURTS (from assideo, I sit) are very ancient in England, and in old law books are defined to be an assembly of knights and other substantial men, with the justice, to meet at a certain time and place: regulated by Magna Charta, 1215.

The present justices of assize and Nisi Prius are derived from the statute of Westminster, 13 Edw. I. 1284. Coke; Blackstone. "The king doth will that no lord, or other of the country, shall sit upon the bench with the justices to take assize in their sessions in the counties of England, upon great forfeiture to the king." 20 Rich. II. 1396. Statutes, Brough Act. Assizes are general or special; general when the judges go their circuits, and special when a commission is issued to take cognisance of one or more causes; see Bloody Assize.

ASSUMPTION, FEAST OF THE, 15 Aug. It is observed by the church of Rome in honour of the Virgin Mary, said to have been taken up to heaven in her corporeal form, body and spirit, on this day, A.D. 45, in her 75th year. The festival was instituted in the 7th century, and enjoined by the council of Meutz, 813.

ASSURANCE, see Insurance.

ASSYRIA, originally Assur, an Asiatic country between Mesopotamia and Media, was the seat of the earliest recorded monarchy. Till recently its history was mainly derived from Greek historians, Ctesias, Herodotus, and Diodorus Siculus, Berosus, a Græco-Chaldean priest, and the Holy Scriptures. The discovery by Mr. (aft. sir) Austen Layard of the Ninevite antiquities, now in the British Museum, and the deciphering of many ancient cuneiform inscriptions, by Grotefend, sir H. Rawlinson, and other scholars, have thrown much light upon Assyrian history. The chronologers, Blair, Usher, Hales, and Clinton, differ much in the dates. The results of recent investigations are given in the rev. G. Rawlinson's "Five Great Monarchies of the Ancient World," and in prof. A. Sayce's "Assyria, its Princes, Priests, and People," 1885. Mr. W. Boscawen's article "Assyria" in "Chambers' Encyclopædia," 1888, has been used for much of this summary.

becomes energetic and warlike, defends himself in Nineveh for two years, and when overcome burns himself in his palace, with his wives and treasures, thus ending the first Assyrian Empire. (Ctesias) 876

[This story and most of what is given above, is now considered mythical.] The following is based upon the records in the ancient Assyrian tablets and the Bible.

His son, Shalmaneser II., makes large conquests in W. Asia 823 et seq.

At Karkar he defeats Benhadad, king of Damascus, Abab, king of Israel, and Ishbuben, king of Hamath. 854

The empire enlarged by his son, Samas-Rimmon II. B.C. 823-810

The Assyrian epigraphic canon records a solar eclipse, and is thereby the basis of Assyrian chronology. 763

Assyrian king; many revolts. 753 et seq.

Adad, or Pul, usurps the throne and styles himself Eightah Pilosser. He consolidated the empire, reformed the government, quelled revolts and enlarged his dominions by the conquest of Babylon, &c. 745-727

His weak son, Shalmaneser IV., king, 727; died, or was murdered by Sargon the Tartan, who continues the war in Assyria, captures Samaria and replaces the inhabitants by colonists. 2 Kings xvii. 720

At the battle of Raphia he checks the advances of Egypt, and captures the rich Hittite capital, Carchemish. 717

Merodach-baladan III. raises a revolt against Sargon, who, after a severe campaign, captures Babylon, and is proclaimed king. 710

Sargon is killed in his new palace. July, 705

His son, Sennacherib, succeeds him.

Babylonia revolts; Merodach-baladan returns, but is defeated at Kisa; Sennacherib conquers Phœnicia, and having been offended by Hezekiah, he ravages Judæa, and besieges Jerusalem, which is saved by the sudden destruction of his army, Isaiah xxxvii. 36-38; he is killed by his sons. Ibid. 631

His son Esar-haddon defeats his brothers and becomes king at Nineveh, and reorganizes the empire. 635 et seq.

He invades Judæa, makes Manasseh prisoner.

He invades Egypt and captures Memphis, and after a long campaign, subdues the country and becomes ruler of nearly all the ancient world 625 et seq.

Disturbed by a rising in Egypt and conspiracies at home, he makes his son, Assur-bani-pal, king at Nineveh, April, 669, and dies during a campaign, Oct. 667. Assur-bani-pal (Sardanapalus?), weak but ambitious, continues the war in Egypt and captures Thebes, invades Phœnicia and captures Tyre.

He appoints his brother, Samas-sum-yukin, viceroy of Babylon, who heads a great revolt, which lasts five years; Babylon is taken and the rebel prince burns himself in his palace with many of his followers. 647

Gradual fall of the empire; new revolts; Egypt becomes independent; Kandalanu, viceroy of Babylon, and his successor, father of Nebuchadnezzar, become independent; Assur-bani-pal succeeded by his son, Assurnetil-ilukinni. 640

ASTROLABE, an instrument for observing the stars, said to have been employed by Hipparchus about 130 B.C.; and by Ptolemy about 140 A.D. The modern astrolabe was described by Fabricius in 1513. Chaucer's "Treatise on the Astrolabe," published 1872 by the Early English Text Society.

ASTROLOGY was cultivated by the Chaldeans, Egyptians, Hindus, Etruscans, Chinese, Greeks, and Romans. It was much in vogue in Italy and France in the 16th century. It is said that Bede, 673-735, was addicted to it; and Roger Bacon, 1214-1292. Lord Burleigh is said to have calculated the nativity of Elizabeth, and she and other princes were dupes of Dee, the astrologer. It is stated that Lilly was consulted by Charles I. respecting his projected escape from Carisbrook castle in 1647. Ferguson. Astrological almanacs are still published in London.

Michael Nostradamus, a French physician (1503-1566), cultivated astrology, published almanacs, and in 1555, "Centuries" and "Presages." His oracles, edited by Mr. Chas. A. Ward, appeared in 1892. He was consulted by Catherine de Medici, Henry II. and Charles IX. of France.

The Astrological Society of Great Britain founded 19 Feb. 1879.

ASTROPHYSICS, the science of applying physics and chemistry and other terrestrial sciences to the heavenly bodies by means of spectrum analysis, photography, &c., developed by sir Wm. Huggins from the work of Kirchhoff and Bunsen, 1861 et seq.

ASTURIAS (Oviedo, since 1833), N.W. Spain, an ancient principality. Here Pelayo collected the Gothic fugitives, about 713, founded a new kingdom, and by his victories checked Moorish conquest. For his successors, see Spain. The heir-apparent of the monarchy has borne the title "prince of Asturias" since 1388, when it was assumed by Henry, son of John I., king of Leon, on his marriage with a descendant of Peter of Castile. In 1808, the junta of Asturias began the organised resistance to the French usurpation.

ASYLUMS, or PRIVILEGED PLACES. at first were places of refuge for those who by accident or necessity had done things that rendered them obnoxious to the law. God commanded the Jews to build cities of refuge, 1451 B.C., Numbers xvi.—Cadmus is mythically said to have built one at Thebes, and Romulus one at Mount Palatine, 151 B.C.; see Sanctuaries; Metropolitan District.

ATALANTA (formerly Junon), training-ship, left Bermuda on a trial voyage, under Capt. Stirling, 31 Jan. 1880. On board, 15 officers, and 255 petty officers, seamen, marines, and boys; never heard of again. Many merchant vessels were wrecked during a terrific gale, 12-16 Feb. 1880.

ATAVISM (Latin atarus, "an ancestor"), the reappearance of an ancestral type in an animal or plant; see also Heredity. Dr. Darwin's "Variation under Domestication," pub. 1868. F. Galton's "Natural Inheritance," pub. 1889. Mendel's "Principles of Heredity," pub. 1902.

ATELIERS NATIONAUX (National Workshops), were established by the French provisional government in Feb. 1848. They interfered greatly with private trade, as about 100,000 workmen threw themselves upon the government for labour and payment. The breaking-up of the system led to the fearful conflicts in June following; and the system was abolished in July.

ATHANASIAN CREED. Athanasius, of Alexandria, elected bishop, 326. He firmly opposed the doctrines of Arius (who denied Christ's divinity), was several times exiled; died in 373.

Lamary, in "History of the Creeds" (1874), asserts that this creed, beginning "Qui cum patre," was not composed by Athanasius; that it is made up of two distinct parts, and was originally written in Latin and put into its present shape between 384 and 390, not connected with Athanasius's name by any trustworthy authority before 500; set forth first in Gaul, about 570; gradually extended into Italy, Britain, &c.; accepted by the Greek church about 1200.

This creed asserts the procession of the Holy Ghost from the Father and the Son, see Trinitarian.

Dr. Waterland's Critical History of this creed, 1723.

Much agitation against the general use of this creed has arisen in the Church of England among both clergy and laity, 1850-70.

Modifications approved by several bishops were negatived by the lower house in convocation (21 May, 1872). The vote was rejected by the bishops, and the agitation continued.

In a letter to the earl of Shaftesbury, 22 July, 1872, the archbishops of Canterbury and York expressed their hope of devising a way for rendering the reading of the creed during public worship not compulsory.

Great meeting of laity at St. James's Hall in defence of the creed, 31 Jan. 1873.

Omission of "Qui cum patre" clauses, in the creed at services in Westminster Abbey revives discussion as to its use, Jan. 1890, &c. 1895.

Memorial signed by 15 deans of cathedrals and collegiate churches within the provinces of Canterbury and York, and addressed to the Archbishops of Canterbury and York, expresses approval of what the bishops have done in regard to the Quicunque

Full in their endeavour to "solve the problem how to maintain unimpaired the statement of catholic faith in the Athanasian creed, and at the same time to relieve the consciences of very many loyal and devout churchmen." They are of opinion that the "condemnatory clauses," in their primæ facie meaning, and in the minds of many who hear them, convey a more unqualified statement than Scripture warrants, and one which is not consonant with the language of the greatest teachers of the church, 31 July, 1905.

The committee appointed by the archbishop of Canterbury, to prepare a new translation of the Athanasian creed, based upon the best Latin text, presents the new translation with a brief statement of the methods adopted by the committee in preparing it, 9 Nov. 1909.

ATHEISM (from the Greek a, without, Theos, God, see Isaiah xiv. 1). It was professed by Epicurus, Lucretius, and other philosophers. Spinoza was the defender of a similar doctrine (1632-1677). Lucilio Vanini publicly taught atheism in France, and was condemned to be burnt at Toulouse in 1619. Mathias Knutzen, of Holstein, openly professed atheism, and had upwards of a thousand disciples in Germany about 1674; he travelled to make proselytes, and his followers were called Conscienciaris, because they held that there is no other deity than conscience. Atheism prevailed during the French republic, 1794 till 1801; see Materialism. Bill to prevent Atheists sitting in Parliament, read, 7 March, 1882; dropped. Mr. Bradlaugh's Oaths bill to relieve Atheists, passed, 24 Dec. 1883. See Parliament.

ATHENÆA were great festivals celebrated at Athens in honour of Minerva. One was called Panathenæa, the other Chalcea; they are mythically said to have been instituted by Erechtheus or Orpheus, 1397 or 1495 B.C.; and revived by Theseus, who caused them to be observed by all the Athenians the first every fifth year, 1234 B.C. Phutarch.

ATHENÆUM, a place at Athens, sacred to Minerva, where the poets and philosophers recited their compositions. That of Rome, of great beauty, was erected by the emperor Adrian, 133.—The ATHENÆUM CLUB of London was formed 16 Feb. 1824, for the association of persons of scientific and literary attainments, and artists, and noblemen and gentlemen, patrons of learning, &c., by the earls of Liverpool and Aberdeen, the marquiss of Lansdowne, Dr. T. Young, Moore, Davy, Scott, Mackintosh, Faraday, Croker, Chantrey, Lawrence, and seven future premiers. The clubhouse was erected in 1829-30 on the site of the late Carlton palace; it is of Grecian architecture, and the frieze is an exact copy of the Panathenæic procession which formed the frieze of the Parthenon.—The LIVERPOOL ATHENÆUM was opened 1 Jan. 1799.—At Manchester, Bristol, and many other places, buildings under this name and for a like purpose have been founded.—The Athenæum, a weekly literary and scientific journal in relation to literature, science, art, and drama, originated by James Silk Buckingham, first appeared in 1828. John Francis, publisher, 1831-82, died 6 April, 1882. Rev. Henry Stebbing, first editor, died 22 Sept. 1883, aged 84. The Athenæum became the property of Mr. C. W. Dilke in 1830, who edited the paper until 1846, when he entrusted it to T. K. Hervey; in 1854 W. Hepworth Dixon succeeded him, followed by Norman MacColl in 1870. John Francis, publisher of the Athenæum; 2 vols., Bentley, 1888.

ATHENRY (Galway). Near here the Irish were totally defeated, and a gallant young chief, Feidlim O'Connor, slain, 10 Aug. 1316.

ATHENS, the capital of ancient Attica, and of modern Greece. The first sovereign mentioned is Ogyges, who reigned in Boeotia, and was master of Attica, then called Ionia. Tradition states that in his reign (about 1764 B.C.) a deluge laid waste the country, which so remained till the arrival of the Egyptian Cecrops and a colony, by whom the land was re-peopled and twelve cities founded, 1556 B.C. The city, said to have been first called Cecropia, was afterwards named Athens in honour of Minerva (Athenē), her worship having been introduced by Erechtheus, 1383 B.C. Athens was ruled by seventeen successive kings (487 years), by thirteen perpetual archons (316 years), seven decennial archons (70 years), and lastly by annual archons (760 years). It attained great power, and no other city has had, in a short space of time, so great a number of illustrious citizens. The ancients called Athens Astū, the city, by eminence, and one of the eyes of Greece; see Greece. The early history is mythical and the dates conjectural.

Population of modern Athens, 1871, 48,107; 1879, 63,374; 1896, 179,755 (with Piræus); 1910, (est.) 200,000.

The MS. text of the recovered work of Aristotle on the Constitution of Athens was published by the British Museum . . . Jan. 1891

ATHLETIC SPORTS were first organised by the Greeks. On the plain of Olympia, at the great national festival held every fourth year in honour of Zeus, athletes trained to the highest degree of physical perfection contested in foot, horse and chariot races, wrestling, boxing and kindred sports, receiving for prizes garlands of wild olives, which also conferred various civic honours and privileges. Similar in their character were the Isthmian, Nemean and Pythian games. The consul, M. Fulvius, in 186 B.C., introduced athletic sports in Rome, but these speedily degenerated into gladiatorial contests. Among Old English sports were running, jumping, archery, quarterstaff, singlestick, and throwing the bar, in which pastime Henry VIII. (1509-47) was an adept. The Cotswold games were celebrated in the 16th and 17th centuries, as were also the Cumberland and Westmoreland sports. In more recent times amateur athletic sports may be said to have begun their revival at the great athletic meeting of the civil service sports in 1864, prior to which time sports were entirely monopolised by professional exponents and frequently overshadowed by ruffianism, and the university sports from the meeting at Christchurch, Oxford, in 1861, when the late king Edward VII. was present. In 1866 the amateur athletic club was formed. "Abuses" became flagrant and a conference of clubs resulted in the foundation of the amateur athletic association, April, 1880. Numerous bodies, such as the amateur athletic association, the national cyclists' union, the football association, the Rugby union, the M.C.C., &c., represent the interests of the various branches of athletic sports, which continue yearly to increase in popularity. See under various headings, as Cricket, Football, Rugby, &c., and Olympic Games.

ATHLONE, Roscommon, Ireland, was burnt during the civil war in 1641. After the battle of the Boyne, colonel R. Grace held Athlone for James II. against a besieging army, but was killed when it was taken by assault by Ginckel, 30 June, 1691; see Angleria.

ATHOS, A mountain in Roumelia, termed Monte Santo from its numerous monasteries whose libraries contain many MSS. especially of the old and new testaments, of great antiquity. Professor Lambros is preparing a catalogue, 1889.

ATLANTA, GEORGIA, population, 1890, 65,533; 1910 (est.), 105,000. See United States, 1864.

ATLANTIC TELEGRAPH, see Electric Telegraph, under Electricity.

ATLANTIC UNION formed for the purpose of uniting by ties of personal friendship the various English-speaking peoples; committee: sir Walter Besant (hon. treasurer), died 9 June, 1901; Dr. (after sir) Conan Doyle, lord Coleridge, and many others; Feb. 1900.

ATLAS, see Charts and Mercator.

ATMOLYSIS, a method of separating the constituent gases of a compound gas (such as atmospheric air) by causing it to pass through a vessel of porous material (such as graphite); first made known in Aug. 1863 by the discoverer, the late professor T. Graham, F.R.S., master of the mint.

ATMOSPHERE, see Air.

ATMOSPHERIC RAILWAYS. The idea of producing motion by atmospheric pressure was conceived by Papin, the French engineer, about 1680. Experiments were made on a line of rail, laid down across Wormwood Scrubs, London, between Shepherd's Bush and the Great Western railroad, to test the efficacy of atmospheric tubes, the working of the air-pump, and speed of carriages upon this new principle on railroads in June, 1840, and then tried for a short time on a line between Croydon and London, 1845. Atmospheric pressure was also tried and abandoned, in 1848, on the South Devon line. An atmospheric railway was commenced between Dalkey and Killiney, in the vicinity of Dublin, in Sept. 1843; opened 29 March, 1844; discontinued in 1855. A similar railway was proposed to be laid down in the streets of London by Mr. T. W. Rammell, in 1857. Mr. Rammell's Pneumatic Railway was put in action successfully at the Crystal Palace on 27 Aug. 1864, and following days. An act for a pneumatic railway between the Waterloo railway station and Whitehall was passed in July, 1865. Atmospheric pressure was proposed for a submarine railway from Dover to Calais, in 1869; see Pneumatic Dispatch.

ATOMIC THEORY, in chemistry, deals with the indivisible particles of all substances. The somewhat incoherent labours of his predecessors

(such as Wenzel, in 1777) were reduced by John Dalton to four laws of combining proportion, which have received the name of "Atomic Theory." His "Chemical Philosophy," containing the exposition of his views, appeared in 1808. Dr. C. Daubeny's work on the Atomic Theory was published in 1850. In his standard of Atomic weights Dalton takes hydrogen as 1. Berzelius, who commenced his elaborate researches on the subject in 1848, adopts oxygen as 100. The former standard is used in this country, the latter on the continent. The theory is accepted by some, and rejected by other chemists. In 1855 Hinrichs propounded a new hypothetical science, Atommechanics, in which panatogen, composed of panatoms, is regarded as the primary chemical principle. "A New View of the Origin of Dalton's Atomic Theory," by Sir H. E. Roscoe and Arthur Harden, published April, 1896.

ATOMS. Democritus (about 400 B.C.) held that the only existing things are innumerable indestructible atoms, varying in form, and combined in obedience to mechanical laws, and that the soul consists of free, smooth, round atoms like those of fire; and that nothing happens by chance. His philosophy was adopted by Epicurus (about 306 B.C.), whose doctrines are luminously expounded by Lucretius in his great poem, "De Rerum Natura" (On the Nature of Things), 57 B.C. The atomic philosophy, in a modified form, was recognised by Gassendi, who died 1655 A.D. Sir Wm. Thomson's discourse "On the Size of Atoms," at the Royal Institution, 2 Feb. 1883, is printed in the "Proceedings," vol. x. See Times, 13 June, 1883.

The discovery of radium and the physical constitution of radio-active bodies has greatly modified the views formerly held by physicists on this subject; see lecture by Sir Oliver Lodge on "Radium and its Meaning," Times 6 Jan., 1904.

ATREBATES, a Belgic people, subdued by Cæsar, 57 B.C.; see Artois.

ATTAINDER, ACTS OF, whereby a person not only forfeited his land, but his blood was attainted, have been numerous. Two witnesses in cases of high treason are necessary where corruption of blood is incurred, unless the party accused shall confess, or stand mute, 7 & 8 Will. III. 1694-5. Blackstone. The attainer of lord Wm. Russell, who was beheaded in Lincoln's-inn-fields, 21 July, 1683, was reversed under William, in 1689. The rolls and records of the acts of attainder passed in the reign of James II. were cancelled and publicly burnt, 2 Oct. 1695. Sir John Fenwick was the last person executed by act of attainder, 28 Jan. 1697. Amongst the last acts reversed was the attainder of the children of lord Edward Fitzgerald (who was implicated in the rebellion in Ireland of 1798), 1 July, 1819. In 1814 and 1833 the severity of attainders was mitigated. Several attainders reversed about 1827, and one in 1853 (the earl of Perth).

ATTICA, see Athens.

ATTILA, surnamed the "Scourge of God," and thus distinguished for his conquests and his crimes, having ravaged the eastern empire from 445 to 450, when he made peace with Theodosius. He invaded the western empire, 450, and was defeated by Aëtius at Châlons, 451; he then retired into Pannonia, where he died through the bursting of a blood vessel on his nuptials with Ildico, a beautiful virgin, 453.

ATTORNEY (from tour, turn), a person appointed to act for another. An attorney-at-law was a properly qualified law agent practising in the common law courts; persons conducting suits in the courts of chancery being termed solicitors.

The number in Edward III.'s reign was under 400 for the whole kingdom. In the 32nd of Henry VI., 1454, a law reduced the practitioners in Norfolk, Norwich, and Suffolk, from eighty to fourteen, and restricted their increase. The number of attorneys practising in the United Kingdom was said to be 13,824 (1872). By the Judicature Act, 1873, which came in force, 1 Nov. 1875, all solicitors, attorneys and proctors are now called "solicitors of the supreme court."

ATTORNEY-GENERAL, the chief law officer of the crown, is appointed by letters patent. He acts for the crown in all proceedings at law and equity affecting the royal prerogative; and prosecutes for the crown in criminal and in revenue cases, and grants fiats for writs of error. His sanction is required before proceedings can be taken under the Public Health Act, Corrupt Practices Act. He may, in his discretion, prosecute for any misdemeanour, and can stay proceedings in any indictment without consent of prosecutor. In his absence his duties are performed by the "solicitor-general." The first attorney-general was William Bonneville, 1277.

ATTRACTION, described by Copernicus, about 1520, as an appetence or appetite which the Creator impressed upon all parts of matter; by Kepler as a corporeal affection tending to union, 1605. In 1687, sir I. Newton published his "Principia," containing his important researches on this subject. See Gravitation, Magnetism, and Electricity.

ATWOOD'S MACHINE, for proving the laws of accelerated motion by the falling of weights, invented by George Atwood; described 1784; he died 11 July, 1807.

AUBAINE, a right of the French kings, which existed from the beginning of the monarchy, whereby they claimed the property of every stranger who died in their country without having been naturalised, was abolished by the national assembly in 1790-91; re-established by Napoleon in 1804, and finally annulled 14 July, 1819.

AUBEROCHE, Guienne, S. France. The earl of Derby defeated the French, besieging this place, 19 Aug. 1344.

AUCKLAND, capital of North Island (New Zealand), was founded Sept. 1840. The population of the district, in 1857, was estimated at 15,000 Europeans, and 35,000 natives; 1901, 67,226 (city and suburbs). The seat of government was removed to Wellington on Cook's Strait, Dec. 1864. Visit of the duke of Cornwall and York (prince of Wales), 10 July, 1901. Visit of the American battleship fleet, 9-15 August, 1908.

AUCTION, a kind of sale known to the Romans, mentioned by Cicero, Livy, and Petronius Arbiter. The first in Britain was about 1700, by Elisha Yale, a governor of Fort George, now Madras, in the East Indies, who thus sold the goods he had brought home. Auction and sales' tax began, 1779. Various acts of parliament have regulated auctions and imposed duties, in some cases as high as five per cent. By 8 Vic. c. 15 (1845), the duties were repealed, and a charge imposed "on the licence to be taken out by all auctioneers in the United Kingdom, of 10*l*." In 1858 there were 4358 licences granted, producing 43,580*l*.; 90,774*l*. in 1902. The abuses at auctions, termed "knock-outs," caused by combinations of brokers and others, excited much attention in Sept. 1866. An act regulating sales of land by auction was passed 15 July, 1867. Certain sales are now exempt from being conducted by a licensed auctioneer, such as goods and chattels under a distress for rent, and sales under the provisions of the Small Debts' acts for Scotland and Ireland. See the very important Sale of Goods Act.

AUDIANTI, followers of Audeus of Mesopotamia, who, having been expelled from the Syrian church on account of his severely reproving the vices of the clergy, about 338, formed a sect and became its bishop. He was banished to Scythia, where he is said to have made many converts. His followers celebrated Easter at the time of the Jewish passover, attributed the human figure to the Deity, and had other peculiar tenets.

AUDIOMETER (from audio, I hear), an instrument for the measurement of the faculty of hearing; invented by professor Hughes (died 22 Jan. 1900). It consists of a battery of two Leclanché's cells connected with a simple microphone and telephone; described to the Royal Society, 15 May, 1879.

AUDIPHONE, an instrument to assist the partially deaf, invented by Mr. R. G. Rhodes of Chicago, and modified by M. Colladon of Geneva, in 1880. It consists of a thin sheet of hard ebonite rubber or card-board. This should be placed against the teeth, through which and other bones the vibrations are conveyed to the auditory nerve.

AUDIT-OFFICE, Somerset House. Commissioners for auditing the public accounts were appointed in 1785, and many statutes regulating their duties have since been enacted.

AUDLEY'S REBELLION, see Rebellions, 1497.

AUERSTÄDT (Prussia). Here on 14 Oct. 1806, the French, under Davoust, signally defeated the Prussians, under Blücher; see Jena.

AUGHRIM, near Athlone, in Ireland, where on 12 July, 1691, a battle was fought between the Irish, headed by the French general St. Ruth, and the English under general Ginckel. The former were defeated and lost 7000 men; the latter lost only 600 killed and 960 wounded. St. Ruth was slain. This engagement proved decisively fatal to the interest of James II., and Ginckel was created earl of Athlone.

AUGMENTATION OF POOR LIVINGS OFFICE, established in 1704. 5597 clerical livings, not exceeding 50*l*. per annum, were found by the commissioners under the act of Anne capable of augmentation, by means of the bounty then established.

AUGMENTATIONS COURT, established in 1535 by 27 Hen. VIII. c. 27, in relation to cap. 28 same session, which gave the king the property of all monasteries having 200*l.* a year. The court was abolished by Mary, 1553, and restored by Elizabeth, 1558.

AUGSBURG (Bavaria), originally a colony settled by Augustus, about 12 B.C.; became a free city, and flourished during the middle ages. Here many important diets of the empire have been held. In A.D. 952, a council confirmed the order for the celibacy of the priesthood. Augsburg has suffered much by war, having been frequently taken by siege,—in 788, 1703, 1704, and, last, by the French, 10 Oct. 1805, who restored it to Bavaria in March, 1806. Population, 1890, 75,523; 1910, 105,000.

"Peace of Religion" signed at Augsburg, 25 Sept. 1555
League of Augsburg, for maintenance of the treaties of Münster, Nimeguen: a treaty between Holland and other powers against France, signed 9 July, 1686

AUGURY. Three augurs, at Rome, with vestals and several orders of the priesthood, were formally constituted by Numa, about 710 B.C. The number increased, and was fifteen at the time of Sylla, 81. The college of augurs was abolished by Theodosius about A.D. 390.

AUGUST, the sixth month of the Roman year (originally called Sextilis, or the sixth from March), by a decree of the senate received its present name in honour of Augustus Cæsar, in the year 8 B.C., because in this month he was created consul, had thrice triumphed in Rome, added Egypt to the Roman empire, and made an end of the civil wars. He added one day to the month, making it 31 days. The appearance of shooting stars on the 10th of Aug. was observed in the middle ages, when they were termed "St. Lawrence's tears." Their periodicity was noticed by Mr. Forster early in the present century. See under France, 10 August, 1792.

AUGUSTAN ERA began 14 Feb. 27 B.C., or 727 years after the foundation of Rome.

AUGUSTIN or AUSTIN FRIARS, a religious order, which ascribes its origin to St. Augustin, bishop of Hippo, who died 430. They first appeared about the 11th century, and the order was constituted by pope Alexander IV., 1256. The rule requires poverty, humility, and chastity. Martin Luther was an Augustin monk. The Augustins held the doctrine of free grace, and were rivals of the Dominicans. The order appeared in England soon after the conquest, and had 32 houses at the suppression, 1536. One of their churches, at Austin Friars, London, erected 1354, and since the Reformation used by Dutch protestants, was partially destroyed by fire, 22 Nov. 1862. It was restored, and reopened, 1 Oct. 1865. A religious house of the order, dedicated to St. Monica, mother of Augustin, was founded in Hoxton-square, London, 1864. Letters and documents of the Dutch Church of London, 1462-1874, edited by J. H. Hessels; completed, 1897.

AULIC COUNCIL, a sovereign court in Germany, established by the emperor Maximilian I., being one of the two courts, the first called the Imperial Chamber civil and criminal, instituted at Worms, 1495, and afterwards held at Spire and Wetzlar, and the other the Aulic council at Vienna, 1506. These courts having concurrent jurisdiction, were instituted for appeals in particular cases from the courts of the Germanic states.

AURAY (N. W. France). Here, on 29 Sept. 1364, the English, under John Chandos, defeated the French and captured their leader Du Guesclin. Charles of Blois, made duke of Brittany by the king of France, was slain, and a peace was made in April, 1365.

AURICULAR CONFESSION. The confession of sin at the ear (Latin, auris) of the priest was an early practice. It is incorrectly stated to have been forbidden in the 4th century by Nectarius, archbishop of Constantinople. It was enjoined by the council of Lateran in 1215, and by the council of Trent in 1551. It was one of the six articles of faith enacted by our Henry VIII. in 1539, but was abolished in England at the Reformation. Its revival here has been attempted by the extreme or Ritualistic section of the high church party.

The rev. Alfred Poole, a curate of St. Barnabas, Knightsbridge, was suspended by his bishop from his office for practising auricular confession in June, 1858, and the suspension was confirmed in Jan. 1859. Much excitement was created by a similar attempt by the rev. Temple West at Boyne Hill, in Sept. 1858.

In May, 1873, 483 clergymen of the Church of England presented a petition to convocation for the education, selection, and licensing of duly qualified confessors, in accordance with the provisions of canon law. Strongly disapproved of by the bishops.

AURIFLAMMA or ORIFLAMME, the national banner mentioned in French history, belonging to the abbey of St. Denis, and suspended over the tomb of that saint. Louis le Gros was the first king who took this standard from the abbey to battle, 1124. Hénault. It appeared for the last time at Agincourt, 25 Oct. 1415. Tillet. Others say at Monthery, 16 July, 1465.

AURORA, FRIGATE, sailed from Britain in 1771 to the East Indies, and was never again heard of.—AURORA, daily papal newspaper, appeared at Rome 1 June, 1880.

AURORÆ BOREALES AND AUSTRALÆ (Northern and Southern Polar Lights), though rarely seen in central Europe, are frequent in the arctic and antarctic regions. In March, 1716, an aurora borealis extended from the west of Ireland to the confines of Russia. The whole horizon lat. 57° N. was overspread with continuous haze of a dismal red during a whole night, Nov. 1765.—Mr. Foster, the companion of captain Cook, saw the aurora in lat. 58° S. The aurora is now attributed to the passage of electric light through the rarefied air of the polar regions. In August and September, 1859 (and about 24 Oct. 1870), when brilliant auroræ were very frequent, the electric telegraph wires were seriously affected, and communications interrupted. Auroræ were seen at Rome and Basel, and also in Australia. A magnificent aurora appeared in New York and other states, evening of 13 Feb. 1892. A Danish expedition under lieut. Le Com started for N. Finland to study the aurora, Dec. 1900.

AUSTERLITZ, a town in Moravia, where a battle was fought between the French and the allied Austrian and Russian armies, 2 Dec. 1805. Three emperors commanded. Alexander of Russia, Francis of Austria, and Napoleon of France. The killed and wounded exceeded 30,000 on the side of the allies, who lost forty standards, 150 pieces of cannon, and thousands of prisoners. The decisive victory of the French led to the treaty of Presburg, signed 26 Dec. 1805; see Presburg.

AUSTIN FRIARS, see Augustin Friars.

AUSTRALASIA, the fifth great division of the world. This name, originally given it by De Brosses, includes Australia, Van Diemen's Land (or Tasmania), New Guinea, New Zealand, New Britain, New Caledonia, &c., mostly discovered within two centuries. Accidental discoveries were made by the Spaniards as early as 1520; but the first accurate knowledge of these southern lands is due to the Dutch, who in 1606 explored a part of the coast of Papua or New Guinea. Torres, a Spaniard, passed through the straits which now bear his name, between that island and Australia, and gave the first correct report of the latter, 1606. The Dutch continued their discoveries. Grant in 1800, and Flinders again (1801-5) completed the survey. M'Culloch. Estimated population of the Australasian colonies in 1891, 3,032,000; census 1901, 4,514,434. Revenue 1904-5, 11,400,000; expenditure, 11,450,000. Imports, 1903, 26,770,160; exports, 26,738,117; public debt, 1904, 80,033,580*l.*

AUSTRALIA (formerly New Holland), the largest island and smallest continent; estimated area about 2,954,417 square miles, including five provinces—New South Wales, Victoria (formerly Port Phillip), South Australia, West Australia (or Swan River), and Queensland (all which see). Population, with Tasmania and New Zealand, in 1871, about 1,958,650; 1874, 2,334,210; 1878, 2,705,700; 1882, 2,936,409; 1888, 3,546,725; 1901, 3,773,801; 1910 est., 4,384,634, excluding aborigines.

Gold discovered by Mr. Hargreaves, &c., 1851.

* GOLD DISCOVERY.—Mr. Edward Hargreaves went to California in search of gold, and was struck with the similarity between the rocks and strata of California and those of his own district of Conochoas, some thirty miles west of Bathurst. On his return home, he examined the soil, and after one or two months' digging, found a quantity of gold, 12 Feb. 1851. He applied to the colonial government for a reward, which he readily obtained, with an appointment as commissioner of crown lands. The excitement became intense throughout the colony of New South Wales, rapidly spread to that of Victoria and other places, and in the first week of July, 1851, an aboriginal inhabitant, formerly attached to the Welling-ton mission, and then in the service of Dr. Kerr, of Wallawa, discovered, while tending his sheep, a mass of gold about a heap of quartz. Three blocks of quartz (from two to three hundred weight), found in the Murroo Creek, fifty miles to the north of Bathurst, contained 112 lb. of pure gold, valued at 400*l.* The "Victoria nugget," a magnificent mass of virgin gold, weighing 340 ounces, was brought to England from the Bendigo diggings, and a piece of pure gold of 128 lb. weight was also found. From the gold fields of Mount Alexander and Ballarat, in the district of Victoria, up to Oct. 1852, there were found 2,532,422 ounces, or 105 tons 10 cwt. of gold; and the gold exported up to the same date represented 3,863,477*l.* sterling. In Nov. 1856, the "James Baines" and "Lightning" brought gold from Melbourne valued at 1,200,000*l.* The "Welcome nugget" weighed 2019½ ounces; value, 8376*l.* 10*s.* 10*d.*; found at Bakery Hill, Ballarat, 11 June, 1858. Between May, 1851, and May, 1861, gold to the value of 96,000,000*l.* had been brought to England from New South Wales and Victoria. Mr Hargreaves died about 2 Nov. 1891.

AUSTRALASIAN ASSOCIATION, for the advancement of science, was founded mainly by the exertions of prof. Liversidge, 1886, held its first meeting in Sydney, Aug. 1888.

AUSTRASIA, Österreich (Eastern Kingdom), also called Metz, a French kingdom which lasted from the 6th to the 8th century. It began with the division of the territories of Clovis by his sons, 511, and ended by Charlemagne becoming a monk and surrendering his power to his brother Pepin, who thus became sole king of France, 747.

AUSTRIA, a Hamburg company's steamship, sailed from Southampton to New York 4 Sept. 1858, with 528 persons on board. On 13 Sept. in lat. 45° N., long. 41° 30' W., it caught fire through the carelessness of some one in burning some tar to fumigate the steerage. Only 67 persons were saved—upwards of 60 by the Maurice, a French barque; the rest by a Norwegian barque.

AUSTRIA, Österreich (Eastern Kingdom), anciently Noricum and part of Pannonia, was annexed to the Roman empire about 33; was overrun by the Huns, Avars, &c., during the 5th and 6th centuries, and taken from them by Charlemagne, 791-796. He divided the government of the country, establishing margraves of Eastern Bavaria and Austria. Louis the German, son of Louis le Débonnaire, about 817, subjugated Radbod, margrave of Austria; but in 883 the descendants of the latter raised a civil war in Bavaria against the emperor Charles the Fat, and eventually the margraves of Austria were declared immediate princes of the empire. In 1156 the margraviate was made an hereditary duchy by the emperor Frederic I.; and in 1453 it was raised to an archduchy by the emperor

Frederic III. Rodolph, count of Hapsburg, elected emperor of Germany in 1273, acquired Austria in 1278; and from 1493 to 1804 his descendants were emperors. On 11 Aug. 1804, the emperor Francis II. renounced the title of emperor of Rome and king of Germany (popularly termed emperor of Germany), and became hereditary emperor of Austria. The condition of Austria is now greatly improving under the enlightened rule of the present emperor. The political constitution of the empire is based upon—1. The pragmatic sanction of Charles VI., 1734, which declares the indivisibility of the empire and rules the order of succession. 2. The pragmatic sanction of Francis II., 1 Aug. 1804, when he became emperor of Austria only. 3. The diploma of Francis Joseph, 20 Oct. 1860, whereby he imparted legislative power to the provincial states and the council of the empire (Reichsrath). 4. The law of 26 Feb. 1861, on the national representation. Self-government was granted to Hungary, 17 Feb. 1867. Each country has its parliament, and a controlling body termed the Delegations, consisting of 120 members, half elected by Austria and half by Hungary, was also established in 1867. The empire was ordered to be named henceforth the Austro-Hungarian monarchy, or Austria-Hungary, by decree, 14 Nov. 1868. On 19 Oct. 1889, the army was ordered to be styled "Imperial and Royal." Population of the empire* in Oct. 1857, 35,018,988; reduced to 32,530,000 by the loss of Venetia, &c., in 1866 (about 16,000,000 Slavs of different dialects). AUTOMATON FIGURES (or ANDROIDS), made to imitate living actions, are of early invention. Friar Bacon is said to have made a brazen head which spoke, A.D. 1264. Albertus Magnus spent thirty years in making another. A coach and two horses, with a footman and page, and a lady inside, were made by Camus for Louis XIV. when a child; the horses and figures moved naturally, variously, and perfectly, 1649. Vaucanson, in 1738, made an artificial duck, which performed many functions of a real one—eating, drinking, and quacking; and he also made a flute-player. The writing automaton, exhibited in 1769, was a pentagraph worked by a confederate out of sight. The automaton chess-player, of Maelzel, exhibited the same year, was also worked by a hidden person; so was the "invisible girl," 1800. See Chess. Maelzel made a trumpet about 1809. Early in this century, an automaton was exhibited in London which pronounced several sentences with tolerable distinctness. The "anthropoglossus," an alleged talking-machine, exhibited at St. James's hall, London, July, 1864, was proved to be a gross imposition. The exhibition of the talking-machine of professor Faber of Vienna, in London, began 27 Aug. 1870, at the Palais Royal, Argyll-street, W. Psycho, an automaton card-player, invented by J. N. Maskelyne and John Algernon Clarke, exhibited in London, Jan. 1875. Another Zoë, which played cards, was exhibited by Mr. Maskelyne, 1877. An automaton hare was hunted at Hendon, near London, 9 Sept. 1876. See Enigmarelle.

Automatic machines for supplying gas "penny in the slot," sweetmeats, and other articles, weighing, photographing, &c., much in vogue. 1910

AUTOMOBILE CLUB, was founded 1897 for the social intercourse of persons interested in motor locomotion and its development. 4,800 members in 1910. Ladies' Automobile Club, instituted 1903, see Motors.

Ladies' Automobile Club holds its first meeting at Carlton-house Terrace. 9 June, 1904

AUTONOMISTS, a name assumed by a socialist party in Paris (see Possibilists), 1887.

AUTOTYPOGRAPHY, a process of producing a metal plate from drawings, made known by Mr. Wallis, in April, 1863; it resembled Nature-printing (which see).

may be obtained from Stukeley's "Abury" (1743), Hoare's "Ancient Wiltshire" (1812-21), and the rev. A. C. Smith's work (1884). They are considered to have been set up during the "stone age," i.e., when weapons and implements were mainly formed of that material. Sir John Lubbock (lord Avebury, 1900) takes his title from this place.

AVIGNON, a city, S. E. France, ceded by Philip III. to the pope in 1273. The papal seat was removed by Clement V. to Avignon, in 1309. In 1348 Clement VI. purchased the sovereignty from Jane, countess of Provence and queen of Naples. In 1308, the French, wearied of the schism, expelled Benedict XIII., and Avignon ceased to be the seat of the papacy. Here were held nine councils (1080-1457). Avignon was seized and restored several times by the French kings; the last time restored, 1773. It was claimed by the national assembly, 1791, and was confirmed to France by the congress of sovereigns in 1815. In Oct. 1791, horrible massacres took place here. See Popes, 1309-94.

AXE, frequently mentioned in the Bible, Deut. xix. 5; Judges, ix. 48; 1 Sam. xiii. 20; Psalms lxxiv. 5, etc. See Tools.

AXUM, or AUXUME, a town in Abyssinia said to have been the capital of a kingdom whose people were converted to Christianity by Frumentius about 330, and were allies of Justinian, 533.

AYACUCHO (Peru). Here the Peruvians finally achieved their independence by defeating the Spaniards, 9 Dec. 1824.

AYDE, or AIDE, the tax paid by the vassal to the chief lord upon urgent occasions. In France and England an aide was due for knighting the king's eldest son. One was demanded by Philip the Fair, 1313. The aide due upon the birth of a prince, ordained by the statute of Westminster (Edward I.), 1285, was not to be levied until he was fifteen years of age, for the ease of the subject. The aide for the marriage of the king's eldest daughter could not be demanded in this country until her seventh year. In feudal tenures there was an aide for ransoming the chief lord; so when our Richard I. was kept a prisoner by the emperor of Germany, an aide of 20s., to redeem him, was enforced upon every knight's fee; see Benevolence.

AYLESBURY, Buckinghamshire, was reduced by the West Saxons in 571. Incorporated by charter in 1554; absorbed into the county 1889. The ancient parish church was restored by sir G. G. Scott, 1849-67. Visited by queen Victoria 14 May, 1890. Pop., 1901, 13,668. Railway accident, 4 deaths, 23 Dec. 1904.

AYLESFORD (Kent). Here, it is said, the Britons were victorious over the Saxon invaders, 455, and Horsa was killed.

AYR, capital of Ayrshire, S. W. Scotland: chartered and endowed by William the Lion, 12th century; fortified by Oliver Cromwell.—By a sudden fire at Templeton's carpet works, 29 persons perished, 16 June, 1876. Statue of Burns at Irvine unveiled by Mr. Alfred Austin, poet laureate, 18 July, 1896. Town hall, &c., burnt down, estimated loss, 20,000*l.*, 1 July, 1897. AZINCOUR, see Agincourt.

AZOFF, SEA OF, the Palus Mæotis of the ancients, communicates by the strait of Yenikalé (the Bosphorus Cimmerius) with the Black Sea, and is entirely surrounded by Russian territory; Taganrog and Kertch being the principal places. An expedition, composed of British, French, and Turkish troops, commanded by sir G. Brown, arrived at Kertch, 24 May, 1855, when the Russians retired, after blowing up the fortifications. On the 25th the allies marched upon Yenikalé, which also offered no resistance. On the same evening the allied fleet entered the Sea of Azoff, and in a few days completed their occupation of it, after capturing a large number of merchant vessels, &c. An immense amount of stores was destroyed by the Russians to prevent their falling into the hands of the allies.

AZOIMIDE, a compound of hydrogen and nitrogen (azote), a very explosive gas, obtained from organic sources, such as benzoyl-glycollic acid and hippuric acid, by prof. Curtius in 1890. It forms salts by combination with metals; it is described in Nature, 10 Dec. 1891.

AZORES, or WESTERN ISLES (N. Atlantic), belonging to Portugal, the supposed site of the ancient Atlantis, are said to have been discovered in the 15th century by Vanderberg of Bruges, who was driven on their coasts by the weather. Cabral, sent by the Portuguese court, fell in with St. Mary's in 1432, and in 1457 they were all discovered and named Azores from the number of goshawks found on them. They were given by Alfonso V. to the duchess of Burgundy in 1466, and colonised by Flemings. They were subject to Spain 1580-1640. The isle Terceira, during the usurpation of dom Miguel, declared for donna Maria, 1829, and a government was established at the capital Angra, 1830-33. A volcano at St. George's destroyed the town of Ursulina, May, 1808; and in 1811 a volcano appeared near St. Michael's, in the sea, where the water was eighty fathoms deep; an island then formed gradually disappeared. A destructive earthquake lasting 12 days, happened in St. Michael's, 1591. The telegraphic cable from Lisbon to the Azores was inaugurated by the king and queen at Carcavellos, 27 Aug. 1893.

AZOTE, see Nitrogen.

AZOTUS, see Ashdod.

AZRAEL, according to Mohammedan mythology, the "Angel of Death," who "separates men's souls and bodies, and with his assistants either tears them asunder with violence, or draws them apart with gentleness."

AZTECS, the ruling tribe in Mexico at the time of the Spanish invasion (1519). In June, 1853, two pretended Aztec children were exhibited in London. They were considered by professor Owen to be merely South American dwarfs. They were married in London, 1 April, 1867, and exhibited for some time after.

B.

BAAL (Lord), the principal male deity of the Phœnician nations, worshipped as the supreme ruler and vivifier of nature. He was also frequently worshipped by the Israelites, especially by Ahab, introduced into Israel by Jezebel, his Zidonian wife 918 B.C. His priests and votaries were massacred by Jehu, and his temple defiled, 883 B.C. The cult of the Babylonian deity Bel, and Tyrian god Mel, were allied to Baal worship. The name, a general Semitic word, was generic, signifying lord, and applied to various divinities, or to the same deity regarded in various aspects as exercising different functions. The word enters into the composition of many Hebrew, Phœnician, and Carthaginian names of persons and places, e.g., "Hannibal," "Baal is gracious," Baalbek, &c. See Sayce's Hibbert Lectures, 1887, and W. R. Smith's "Religion of the Semites," 1894.

BAALBEC, HELIOPOLIS (both meaning "City of the Sun"), an ancient city of Syria, of which magnificent ruins remain. The chief of those is the temple of the Sun, built by Antoninus Pius; converted into a Christian Church by the emperor Theodosius. The Temple of Jupiter, of smaller size, is situated south of the Great Temple; a third ruin is known as the Circular Temple. Visited by Wood (in 1751), and others. Its origin is lost in antiquity. Originally a centre of sun worship, Baalbec became a Roman colony under Augustus Cæsar. The city was sacked by the Moslems, 748, and by Timour Beg (Tamerlane), 1400. Visited by terrible earthquake, 1759. Site of the Acropolis excavated by Germans, 1900-02. See Heliopolis; and Germany, 10 Nov. 1898.

BABA WALI. See Afghanistan, 1 Sept. 1880; and Mazea.

BABEL, TOWER of, built by Noah's posterity, 2247 B.C. (Genesis, ch. xi.) The magnificent temple of Belus, asserted to have been originally this tower, is said to have had lofty spires, and many statues of gold, one of them forty feet high. In the upper part of this temple was the tomb of the founder, Belus (the Nimrod of the sacred scriptures), who was deified after death. Blair. The Birs Nimroud, the site of a temple dedicated to Nebo and called the "Temple of the Seven Lights" (planets), examined by Rich, Layard, and others, is conjectured by some to be the remains of the tower of Babel. More recent scholarship would seem to identify the Tower of Babel with the Zikkurat of the temple E-sagilla, the extensive ruins of which, now known as Amran, are in Babylon. See Prof. Sayce's "Fresh Light from the Ancient Monuments," 1884; and Sayce's edition of Geo. Smith's "Chaldean Account of Genesis," 1880.

BÂBI-ISM, the tenets of a Mohammedan sect, founded in Persia, about 1843, by Sayid Mirza Ali, born 1819, who while resident near Bagdad, began to preach a new faith which in many respects differed from orthodox Sufism. He took the name of Bab-ed-din, "the gate of the faith," whence he became known as "the Bâb," and his disciples "Babis." Subsequently he called himself "the Nuqta," "the point or focus," as being not merely the recipient of a new divine revelation, but the focus in which all preceding dispensations would converge. Moses, Jesus Christ, and Mohamud were revered by him as prophets and his fore-runners. By the doctrines of Bâbi-ism polygamy, concubinage, and the inferior states of women were condemned; morality, cheerfulness, and benevolence are inculcated. Buddhistic and Gnostic ideas are mingled with the teaching of the sect. Incurring the hostility of the orthodox mullahs, the Bâb, with many of his followers, after armed resistance to their persecutors, were defeated and dispersed, he himself being put to death at Tabriz, 8 July, 1850. His successor was Mirza Yahya, a youth of noble birth. Accused of being implicated in an attempt on the life of the Shah, Nasr-ed-Din, in 1852, the sect suffered much persecution, and the Bâbis were deported to Constantinople, 1863, and soon afterwards to Adrianople, and in 1868 to Famagusta in Cyprus. Since that date Acre has been the headquarters of the section under Baha, numbering about 1,000,000. See also Persia.

BABY-FARMING, see Infanticide.

BABYLONIA* (Babilu Assyrian, Babirush Persian, the Shinar, Babel, and land of the Chaldees of the Old Testament), a vast plain watered by the Tigris and Euphrates, the seat of a great Asiatic empire, traditionally stated to have been founded by Belus, supposed to have been the

* The city of Babylon was at one time the most magnificent in the world. The Hanging Gardens are described as having been of a square form, and in terraces one above another until they rose as high as the walls of the city, the ascent being from terrace to terrace by steps. The whole pile was sustained by vast arches raised on other arches; and on the top were flat stones closely cemented together with plaster of bitumen, and that covered with sheets of lead, upon which lay the mould of the garden, where there were large trees, shrubs, and flowers, with various sorts of vegetables. There were five of these gardens, each containing about four English acres, and disposed in the form of an amphitheatre. Strabo; Diodorus. Pliny said that in his time it was but a desolate wilderness. Mr. Rich visited the ruins in 1811, and sir R. Ker Porter in 1818. The laborious researches of Mr. (after sir A. H.) Layard, sir H. Rawlinson, M. Botta, and others, and the interesting relics excavated and brought to this country between the years 1849 and 1855, have caused very much attention to be given to the history of Babylon. Many of the inscriptions in the cuneiform or wedge-like character have been translated, principally by and (after sir Henry) Rawlinson, and published in the Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society. In the spring of 1855 he returned to England, bringing with him many valuable relics, drawings, &c., which are now in the British Museum. Important exploration of the ruins of Niffer, near Babylon, at the cost of the Babylonian Exploration Fund of Philadelphia, conducted by Dr. Peters, 1888-94 et seq.; an ancient temple of Bel was discovered, with many other relics; reported Dec. 1894. American explorations on the site of N. Babylonia renewed, under Mr. Haynes, in 1893; cities of Nippur, or Niffer, and Mudi-lil "Older Bel," in S. Babylonia excavated; reported, Times, 24 June, 1897. Explorations carried on at Susa, first by Loftus, palaces uncovered by M. Dieulafoy, 1884-86, and by M. de Morgan, Dec. 1897, palace ruins, monuments, &c., discovered, Times, 10 Jan. 1900. King Khammurabi's laws abt. B.C. 2200 trans. by Dr. Schiel, Times, 14 April, 1903.

Nimrod of Gen. x. 1, 8. See Assyria. According to the earliest existing history the country was divided between two races, the Sumir (Turanian), the probable inventors of cuneiform writing; and the Accad or Akkad (Semitic), which became predominant. See Accadians. "The fragmentary Canon of Kings," given by Berossus the Græco-Chaldean priest 268 B.C., had been superseded by the newly-discovered Babylonian canon inscriptions on tablets carefully dated from 2200 to 647 B.C., an unequalled chronological series. Summaries are given by Mr. Boscawen in the articles "Assyria" and "Babylonia" in "Chambers' Encyclopædia," 1901.

BABINGTON'S CONSPIRACY, to assassinate queen Elizabeth, and make Mary of Scotland queen, was devised by John Savage, a soldier of Philip of Spain, and approved by Wm. Gifford and John Ballard, catholic priests. Anthony Babington and others joined in the scheme. They were betrayed by Pooley, a spy, and fourteen were executed, 20, 21 Sept. 1586.

Sterndale Bennett, Sir G. Smart, J. Hullah, C. Potter, and other eminent musicians. The society was dissolved, 21 March, 1870, and the music given up to the Royal Academy of Music.

BACHELORS. The Roman censors frequently imposed fines on unmarried men; and men of full age were obliged to marry. A tax laid upon bachelors in England, twenty-five years of age (varying from 12l. 10s. for a duke, to 1s. for a common person), lasted from 1695 to 1705. Bachelors (Romanist priests excepted) were subjected to an extra tax on their male and female servants in 1785. Gray's Inn celebrates the 300th anniversary of Bacon's election as treasurer, 17 Oct. 1908.

BACTERIA, Schizomycetes, or Bacilli, discovered 1680 by Leeuwenhoek, a Dutch investigator, and called by him animalcules. Established by Cohn (1853) to be small, single-celled fungoid plants. They are found everywhere, and through the researches of Koch, Pasteur, Duguid, Burdon Sanderson, Klein, Fullerton, and others the bacilli of many diseases have been identified. Prof. Molisch, of Prague, reports a lamp illuminated by means of bacteria, March, 1903. See Germ Theory.

The Greek kingdom appears to have been broken up by the irruption of the Scythians shortly after.

BAFFIN'S BAY (N. America), discovered by William Baffin, an Englishman, 1616. The extent of this discovery was much doubted, until the expeditions of Ross and Parry proved that Baffin was substantially accurate in his statement. Parry entered Lancaster Sound, and discovered the islands known by his name, in 1818. British flag hoisted at Cumberland Sound, territory annexed by Canadian government, Sept., 1897. See North-West Passage.

BAGDAD, in Asiatic Turkey, built by Al Mansour, and made the seat of the Saracen empire,

BAIL. By ancient common law, before and since the conquest, all felonies were bailable, till murder was excepted by statute; and by the 3 Edward I. (1275) the power of bailing in treason, and in divers instances of felony, was taken away. Bail was further regulated in later reigns. It is now accepted in all cases, except felony; and where a magistrate refuses bail, it may be granted by a judge. Acts respecting bail passed 1826, 1852, and 1893.

BAILIFF, or SHERIFF, said to be of Saxon origin. London had its shire-reve prior to the Conquest, and this officer was generally appointed for counties in England in 1079. Hen. Cornhill and Rich. Reynere were appointed bailiffs or sheriffs in London in 1189. Stow. Sheriffs were appointed in Dublin under the name of bailiffs, in 1308; and the name was changed to sheriff in 1548. There are still places where the chief magistrate is called bailiff, as the high bailiff of Westminster. Bumbailiff is a corruption of bound-bailiff, every bailiff being obliged to enter into bonds of security for his good behaviour. Blackstone.

Davy, Faraday, Tyndall, and other eminent men, have given the lecture.

BAKU. See under Petroleum and Russia, 1905.

BALAKLAVA, a small town in the Crimea, with a fine harbour, 10 miles S. E. from Sebastopol. After the battle of the Alma, the allies advanced upon this place, 26 Sept. 1854.

Battle of Balaklava.—About 12,000 Russians, commanded by general Liprandi, attacked and took some redoubts in the vicinity, which had been entrusted to about 250 Turks. They next assaulted the English, by whom they were compelled to retire, mainly through the charge of the heavy cavalry, led by brigadier Scarlett, under the orders of lord Lucan. After this, from an unfortunate misconception of lord Raglan's order, lord Lucan ordered lord Cardigan, with the light cavalry, to charge the Russian army, which had reformed on its own ground with its artillery in front. The order was most gallantly obeyed, and great havoc was made on the enemy; but of 670 British horsemen, only 198 returned. The infantry engaged were termed a "thin red line"

It was recognised by the treaty of Münster, 24 Oct. 1648. The arrangements for the balance of power in Europe made in 1815, without the consent of the people of the countries concerned, have been nearly all set aside since 1830. See Powers, European.

BALDACHIN, or BALDACHINO, more properly ciborium (which see), a canopy placed over the altar in some ancient churches; the practice, beginning about 1130, was introduced into England, 1279. The proposal to erect one in St. Barnabas' church, Pimlico, was opposed in the consistory court, Aug. 1873. The trial took place 23, 24 Oct. Dr. Tristram decided against the erection of the baldachin, 15 Dec. 1873.

BALEARIC ISLANDS, in the Mediterranean, called by the Greeks Baleares, and by the Romans Baleares, from the dexterity of the inhabitants at slinging: they include Majorca, Minorca, Iviça, Formentera, Cabrera, Conejera, and other islets. They were conquered by the Romans, 123 B.C.: by the Vandals, about A.D. 426, and formed part of Charlemagne's empire in 799. Conquered by the Moors about 1005, and held by them till about 1286, when they were annexed by Arragon; see Majorca and Minorca.

BALHAM MYSTERY, see Bravo.

BALIZE, see Honduras.

BALKANS, the ancient Haemus, a range of mountains extending from the Adriatic to the Euxine. The passage, deemed impracticable, was completed by the Russians under Diebitsch, during the Russian and Turkish war, 26 July, 1829. An armistice was the consequence; and a treaty of peace was signed at Adrianople, 14 Sept. following. The Balkans were crossed by the Russians under Gourko, 13 July, 1877, see Russo-Turkish War II. By the treaty of Berlin, 13 July, 1878, the Balkans became the frontiers of the Sultan's European dominions.

The Balkan States are Servia, Bulgaria, and Roumelia (which see, also Macedonia, 1905).

BALLADS may be traced in the British history to the Anglo-Saxons. Turner, Adhelme, who died 709, is mentioned as the first who introduced ballads into England. "The harp was sent round, and those might sing who could." Bede. Alfred sang ballads, Malmesbury. Canute composed one. Turner. Minstrels were protected by a charter of Edward IV.; but by a statute of Elizabeth they were made punishable among rogues and vagabonds, and sturdy beggars. Turner. Fletcher, of Saltoun (died 1716) in a letter to Montrose expressed his opinion that making ballads was more important than law-making. The sea-ballads of Dibdin were very popular in the French war; he died 20 Jan. 1833.

BALLETS began through the meretricious taste of the Italian courts. Bergonzio di Botti gave one of great magnificence at Tortona, 1489, in honour of the marriage of the duke of Milan. One performed at the interview between our Henry VIII. and Francis I. of France in the Field of the Cloth of Gold, at Ardres, 1520. Ballets became popular in France, and Louis XIV. bore a part in one, 1664. Introduced into England with operas early in the 18th century.

BALLISTITE, a nearly smokeless gunpowder, invented and patented by Mr. Alfred Nobel, and assigned by him to a company in 1892, see Cordite.

BALLOONS.* A just idea of the principle of the construction of balloons was formed by Albert of Saxony, an Augustine monk in the 14th century, and adopted by a Portuguese Jesuit, Francesco Mendoza, who died at Lyons in 1626. The idea is also attributed to Bartolomeo de Guzman, who died in 1724. The principles of aéronautiques include:—1, the power of a balloon to rise in the air; 2, the velocity of its ascent; and 3, the stability of its suspension at any given height. In 1872 Helmholtz thought balloons might be steered, if moving slowly. Fatal accidents to the voyagers have been estimated at 2 or 3 per cent. The Aéronautical Society of Great Britain, founded with the object of fostering and developing aéronautics and aérolgy, by the duke of Argyll, Mr. James Glaisher, sir Charles Bright, and others, 12 Jan. 1866.

† These were cones of galvanised iron, 16 inches in diameter, and 20 inches long. Each contained 9 or 10 lb. of powder, with apparatus for firing by sulphuric acid. Little damage was done by them. They were said to be the invention of the philosopher Jacobi.

BALTIMORE, a maritime city in Maryland, United States, founded in 1729. On 12 Sept. 1814, the British army under col. Ross advanced against this place. He was killed in a skirmish; and the command was assumed by col. Brooke, who attacked and routed the American army, which lost 600 killed and wounded and 300 prisoners. The projected attack on the town was, however, abandoned. Alison. See United States, 1861. See Roman Catholics and Chili, 1891. Pop. 1901, 541,000.

BAMBERG (Bavaria), said to have been founded by Saxons, in 804, and endowed with a church by Charlemagne. It was made a bishopric in 1007, and the bishop was a prince of the empire till the treaty of Luneville, 1801, when Bamberg was secularised. It was incorporated with Bavaria in 1803. The noble cathedral, rebuilt in 1110, has been recently repaired. Bamberg was taken and pillaged by the Prussians in 1759.

BAMBOROUGH, or Bamburg, Northumberland, according to the "Saxon Chronicle," was built by king Ida about 547, and named Bebbanburgh. The castle and estate, the property of the Forsters, and forfeited to the crown, through their taking part in the rebellion in 1715, were purchased by Nathaniel lord Crewe, bishop of Durham, and bequeathed by him for various charitable purposes. The valuable library was founded by the trustees in 1778. The books are lent to persons residing within 20 miles of the castle.

BAMPTON LECTURES (Theological), delivered at Oxford annually, began in 1780, with a lecture by James Bandinel, D.D. The lecturer is paid out of the proceeds of an estate bequeathed for the purpose by the rev. John Bampton (died 1751) and the lectures are published. Among the more remarkable lectures were those by White (1784), Heber (1815), Whately (1822), Milman (1827), Hampden (1832), Mansel (1858), Liddon (1866), Hatch (1880), Bigg (1886), Gore (1891), Strong (1895), Hutton (1903), Hobhouse (1909).

BANBURY, Oxfordshire, a Saxon town. The castle, erected by Alexander de Blois, bishop of Lincoln, 1125, has been frequently besieged. In 1646 it was taken by the parliamentarians and demolished. At Edgecot or Dancesmore, near Banbury, during an insurrection, the army of Edward IV., under the earl of Pembroke, was defeated by queen Margaret and her adherents 26 July, 1469; the earl and his brother were soon after taken prisoners and executed. Banbury cakes were renowned in the time of Ben Jonson, and Banbury Cross was destroyed by the Puritans. Cakes were presented to the queen at Banbury 30 Nov. 1866.

BANDA ISLES (ten). Eastern Archipelago, visited by the Portuguese in 1511, who settled on them, 1521, but were expelled by the Dutch about 1600. Rohun island was ceded to the English in 1610. The Bandas were taken by the latter in 1796; restored in 1801; retaken in 1811; and restored in Aug. 1816.

BANDA ORIENTAL (South America), a portion of the viceroyalty of Buenos Ayres, one part of which, in 1828, was incorporated with Brazil, while another part became independent, as the republic of Uruguay.

BANGALORE (S. India) was besieged by the British under lord Cornwallis, 6 March, and taken by storm, 21 March, 1791. Bangalore was restored to Tippon in 1792, when he destroyed the strong fort, deemed the bulwark of Mysore. Population, 1901, 159,046; 1910 (est.), 178,000.

BANGKOK, capital of Siam. Estimated population in 1910, about 500,000, of which nearly half are Chinese.

BANGOR (Banchor Iskoed, or Monachorum), Flintshire, the site of an ancient monastery, very populous, if it be true that 1200 monks were slain by Ethelfrid, king of the Angles, for praying for the Welsh in their conflict with him in 607. Tanner.

BANGOR (N. Caernarvonshire). The church is dedicated to St. Daniel, who was a bishop, 510. Owen Glendower greatly defaced the cathedral; and the bishop Bulkeley alienated many of the lands, and even sold the bells of the church, 1553. The see is valued in the king's books at 131*l.* 10*s.* 4*d.* An order in council directing that the sees of Bangor and St. Asaph be united on the next vacancy in either, was issued in 1838; but rescinded in 1847. Present income, 4,200*l.* Bangor was incorporated in 1883. North Wales University College opened, 18 Oct. 1884. Population, 1881, 9,605; 1901, 11,770; 1910, (est.) 13,400.

BANGORIAN CONTROVERSY was occasioned by Dr. Benjamin Hoadley, bishop of Bangor, preaching a sermon before George I., 31 March, 1717, upon the text, "My kingdom is not of this world" (John, xviii. 36), in which he demonstrated the spiritual nature of the church and kingdom of Christ. He thereby drew upon himself the indignation of almost all the clergy, who published hundreds of pamphlets.

BANIAN DAYS, a sailor's phrase for the days on which no flesh meat was served in the British navy, probably from allusion to the ascetic habits of the Hindu Banians.

BANISHMENT, an ancient punishment. By 39 Eliz. c. 4 (1597) dangerous rogues were to be banished out of the realm, and to be liable to death if they returned; see Transportation.

BANK. The name is derived from banco, a bench, erected in the market-place for the exchange of money. The first was established in Italy, 808, by the Lombard Jews, of whom some settled in Lombard-street, London, where many bankers still reside. The Mint in the Tower of London was anciently the depository for merchants' cash, until Charles I. seized the money as a loan, and in 1640 the traders lodged their money with the goldsmiths in Lombard-street. BANK OF ENGLAND was projected by William Paterson, a Scotch merchant (see Darien), to meet the difficulty experienced by William III. in raising the supplies for the war against France. By the influence of Paterson and Michael Godfrey, 40 merchants (aided by Charles Montague) subscribed 500,000l. towards the sum of 1,200,000l. to be lent to the government at 8 per cent., in consideration of the subscribers being incorporated as a bank. The scheme was violently opposed in parliament, but the bill (a tonnage act) obtained the royal assent 25 April, 1694, and the charter was granted 27 July following, appointing sir John Houbblon the first governor, and Michael Godfrey the first deputy-governor. The bank commenced active operations on 1 Jan. 1695, at Grocers' Hall, Poultry, †

* Supported by laws passed 14 April, 1803, and 22 April, 1806. The statutes were approved 16 Jan. 1808. In 1810 Napoleon said that its duty was to provide money at all times at 4 per cent. interest; average rate of discount till 1815, 6 per cent.; much variation since; in 1893, 2·50; the lowest in Europe. In 1890 the bank joined with others in supporting Messrs. Baring. See London, Nov. 1890.

† The foundation of the building in Threadneedle-street was laid 1 Aug. 1732, by sir Edward Bellamy, governor, and the bank removed there 5 June, 1734; it was erected by G. Sampson, architect. Great additions have been made from time to time by successive architects: sir Robert Taylor, sir John Soane, and Mr. C. R. Cockerell. It now occupies the site of the church, and nearly all the parish of St. Christopher-le-Stocks. The churchyard is now termed "the garden." Another entrance opened in Princes-street, 1882.

BANK OF IRELAND. On 9 Dec. 1721, the Irish house of commons rejected a bill for establishing a national bank. Important failures in Irish banks occurred in 1727, 1733, and 1758: this led gradually to the establishment of the Bank of Ireland at St. Mary's abbey, Dublin, 1 June, 1783. The business was removed to the late parliament house, in College-green, in May, 1808. Branch banks of this establishment have been formed in most of the provincial towns in Ireland, all since 1828. Irish Banking Act passed, 21 July, 1845.

* CITY OF GLASGOW BANK (with unlimited liability); founded 1839, identified with Glasgow; held Free Church Sustentation Fund; stopped for a few days during crisis, Nov. 1857. In 1878 paid dividend 12 per cent. (root stock, 2661); 1272 shareholders, very many in humble circumstances. The bank stopped 2 Oct. Investigation showed great fraud and false accounts. Estimated loss, 6,783,000*l.* causing much calamity and ruin to many. The directors, J. Stewart, Lewis Potter, R. Salmon, Wm. Taylor, H. Inglis, and J. I. Wright, and the manager, R. S. Stronach, were committed for trial, 30 Oct. Stronach and Potter were convicted of falsifying and fabricating balance sheets (18 months' imprisonment); the others of uttering the same (3 months' imprisonment), 1 Feb. 1879.

The liquidators reported that about 1819 contributors had paid about 4,500,000*l.* (13*s.* 4*d.* in the pound) x Dec. 1879; 20*s.* in the pound paid to depositors, 2 March, 1880. Mr. James N. Fleming was arrested 25 Jan. for embezzlement, and sentenced to 8 months' imprisonment, 3 July, 1882.

† THE ROYAL BRITISH BANK was established in 1849, by Mr. John McGregor, M.P., and others, under sir R. Peel's joint-stock banking act, 7 & 8 Vict. c. 113 (1844), as an attempt to introduce the Scotch banking system of cash credits into England. On 3 Sept. 1856, it stopped payment, occasioning much distress and ruin to many small tradesmen and others. In consequence of strong evidence of the existence of fraud in the management of the bank, elicited during the examination before the court of bankruptcy, the government instructed the attorney-general to file ex-officio informations against the manager, Mr. H. Innes Cameron, and several of the directors. They were convicted 27 Feb. 1858, after 13 days' trial, and sentenced to various degrees of imprisonment. Attempts to mitigate the punishment failed (May, 1858); but all were released except Cameron and Esdaile, in July, 1858. In April, 1860, dividends had been paid to the amount of 15*s.* in the pound. The attorney-general brought in a bill called the Fraudulent Trustees' Act, 20 & 21 Vict. c. 54, to prevent the recurrence of such transactions.

On 19 April, 1860, a deficiency of 263,000*l.* was discovered in the Union Bank of London. Mr. George Pullinger, a cashier, confessed himself guilty of forgery and fraud, and was sentenced to 20 years' imprisonment.

On 18 Feb. 1861, it was discovered that John Dinden, a clerk of the Commercial Bank of London, had robbed his employers of 67,000*l.*, of which 46,000*l.* might be recovered.

In Dec. 1864, J. W. Terry and Thos. Birch, manager and secretary of the Unity Bank, were committed on a charge of conspiracy for fabricating accounts; but were acquitted on their trial. See Bank, 13 Sept. 1900.

BANNATYNE CLUB, named after George Bannatyne (the publisher), was established in 1823 by sir Walter Scott and others, for printing works illustrative of the history, antiquities, and literature of Scotland, of which about 113 volumes were issued: dissolved, 1860.

BANNERET, KNIGHT, a dignity between baron and knight, anciently conferred by the king under the royal standard on the field of battle. Its origin is of uncertain time: Edmondson dates it 736; but it was probably created by Edward I. John Chandos is said to have been made a banneret by the Black Prince and the king of Castile at Najara, 3 April, 1367. The dignity was conferred on John Smith, who rescued the royal standard at Edgehill fight, 23 Oct. 1642. It fell into disuse, but was revived by George III. for sir William Erskine, in 1764, and for admiral Pye and captains Knight, Bickerton, and Vernon, in 1773.

BANNERS were common to all nations. The Jewish tribes had standards or banners—Nun. ii. (149) B.C.). See Cross, Auriflamma, Standards, &c. The magical banner of the Danes (said to have been a black raven on a red ground) was taken by Alfred when he defeated Hubba, 878.

BANNOCKBURN (Stirlingshire), the site of two battles: (1) between Robert Bruce of Scotland and Edward II. of England, 24 June, 1314. The army of Bruce consisted of 30,000; that of Edward of 100,000 men, of whom 52,000 were archers. The English crossed a rivulet to the attack, and Bruce having dug and covered pits, they fell into them, and were thrown into confusion. The rout was complete: the English king narrowly escaped, and 50,000 were killed or taken prisoners. (2) At Sauchieburn, near here, James III. was defeated and slain on 11 June, 1488, by his rebellious nobles.

BANNS, in the feudal law, were a solemn proclamation of any kind: hence arose the present custom of asking banns, or giving notice before marriage; said to have been introduced into the English church about 1200.

BANQUETING-HOUSE, Whitehall, London, built by Inigo Jones, about 1619. Occupied by the museum of the United Service Institution, 1895.

BANTAM (Java). Here a British factory was established by captain Lancaster, in 1603. The English and Danes were driven from their factories by the Dutch in 1683. Bantam surrendered to the British in 1811, but was restored to the Dutch at the peace in 1814.

BANTINGISM, see Corpulence.

BANTRY BAY (S. Ireland), where a French fleet bringing succour to the adherents of James II., attacked the English under admiral Herbert, 1 May, 1689: the latter retired to form in line and were not pursued. A French squadron of seven sail of the line and two frigates, armed en flûte, and seventeen transports, anchored here for a few days, without effect, Dec. 1796. MUTINY of the Bantry Bay squadron under admiral Mitchell was in Dec. 1801. In Jan. 1802, twenty-two of the mutineers were tried on board the Gladiator, at Portsmouth, when seventeen were condemned to death, of whom eleven were executed; the others were sentenced to receive each 200 lashes. The executions took place on board the Majestic, Centaur, Formidable, Téméraire, and L'Achille, 8 to 18 Jan. 1802. Mock battle here, 30 June, 1885.

BANTÚ, a widely-spread race in the S.S.W. and S.E. of Africa; generically termed "Kafirs," the name, which means "unbelievers," being given to them originally by the Mohammedan traders. The Bantus are distinct from the aboriginal Bushmen and Hottentots; their original habitat being in the north and in equatorial Africa. The Zulus in Natal, the Matabele and Mashonas in Rhodesia, and the Damaras in S.W. Africa belong to the Bantú race.

BANZAI, the Japanese cry of joy, victory or applause, equivalent to English hurrah, French, vive, German, hoch. Came prominently under European notice during the Russo-Japanese war, which began 8 Feb. 1904.

BAPAUME, N. FRANCE, the site of severe indecisive engagements between the French army of the north under Faidherbe, and the Germans under Manteuffel; the French retreated, 2, 3 Jan. 1871.

BAPHOMET, the name of an imaginary idol or symbol having two heads, male and female, surrounded with a crescent moon and serpents, which the knights templars were accused of employing in their mysterious rites. The word is said to be a corrupted form of Mahomet.

BAPTISM, the ordinance of admission into the church, practised by all Christian sects except Quakers. John the Baptist baptized Christ, 30. (Matt. iii.) Infant baptism is mentioned by Ire-

* According to a return to parliament made at the close of Feb. 1826, there had become bankrupt in the few months preceding, 59 banking-houses, comprising 144 partners; and 20 other banking establishments had been declared insolvent. Every succeeding week continued to add from seventy to a hundred merchants, traders, and manufacturers to the bankrupt list. This was the period of bubble speculation.

† Liquidations under deeds of arrangement nearly as numerous as bankruptcies, 1903. Costs 21 per cent. of the estate.

naeus about 97. In the reign of Constantine, 319 baptisteries were built and baptism was performed by dipping the person all over. In the west sprinkling was adopted. Much controversy has arisen since 1831 (particularly in 1849 and 1850), in the church of England, respecting baptismal regeneration, which the Archies' Court of Canterbury decided to be a doctrine of the church of England. See Trials, 1849, and note. Demanding fees for baptisms was made unlawful by an act passed 18 July, 1872.

BAPTISTS (see Anabaptists). A sect distinguished by their opinions respecting (1) the proper subjects, and (2) the proper mode of baptism: the former they affirm to be those who are able to make a profession of faith; the latter to be total immersion. There are seven sections of Baptists—Arminian, Calvinistic (or Particular), &c. The first Baptist church formed in London was about 1608. They published their confession of faith in 1643; revised in 1689. Rhode Island, America, was settled by Baptists in 1635.

BARBERS lived in Greece in the 5th century, and at Rome in the 3rd century B.C. In England, formerly, the business of a surgeon was united to the barber's, and he was denominated a BARBER-SURGEON. A London company was formed in 1308, and incorporated, 1462. This union was partially dissolved in 1540, and wholly so in 1745. BARCELONA (N. E. Spain), an ancient maritime city, said to have been rebuilt by Hamilcar Barca, father of the great Hannibal, about 233 B.C. It was held by the Romans, Goths, Moors, and Franks, and, with the province of which it is the capital, was made an independent country about A.D. 864, and incorporated with Aragon, 1164, the last count becoming king. The city has suffered much by war. The siege by the French in 1694 was relieved by the approach of the English fleet, commanded by admiral Russell; but the city was taken by the earl of Peterborough in 1706. It was bombarded and taken by the duke of Berwick and the French in 1714, and was taken by Napoleon in 1808, and retained till 1814. It revolted against the queen in 1841, and was bombarded and taken in Dec. 1842, by Espartero. Frequent insurrections here; one suppressed Jan. 1874. BARDESANISTS, followers of Bardesanes, of Mesopotamia, who embraced the errors of Valentinus, after refuting them, and added denial of the incarnation, resurrection, &c., about 175.

BARDS. Demodocus is mentioned as a bard by Homer; and we find bards, according to Strabo, among the Romans before the age of Augustus. The Welsh bards formed an hereditary order, regulated, it is said, by laws, enacted about 940 and 1078. They lost their privileges at the conquest by Edward I. in 1284. The institution was revived by the Tudor sovereigns; and their Eisteddfods (properly Eisteddfodau), meetings of 4 days, are held annually. The Gwyneddigion Society of Bards was founded in 1770. Turlough O'Carolan, the last of the Irish bards, died in 1738. Chambers. Evan Davies, termed the Arch-Druid of Wales, an eminent Welsh scholar, aged 89, died at Pontypridd 23 February, 1888. In 1880 the bards determined that the Annual National Eisteddfod should be held alternately in North and South Wales. Above 100 Eisteddfodau are held every year. Clwydfardd, the Arch-Druid, aged nearly 95, died, 30 Oct. 1894. "Eisteddfod Carylidd" held in the queen's hall, London, 22, 23 Feb., 1899. Arch-Druid, 1903, Hwfa Môn, 1903, Dyfed.

BARBONE'S PARLIAMENT. Cromwell, supreme in the three kingdoms, summoned 122 persons, such as he thought he could manage, who, with six from Scotland and five from Ireland, met, as a parliament, 4 July, 1653. It obtained its appellation from a nickname given to one of its members, a leather-seller, named "Praise-God Barbon." The majority evinced much sense and spirit, proposing to reform abuses, improve the administration of the law, &c. The parliament was suddenly dissolved, 13 Dec. 1653, and Cromwell made lord protector.

BARREILLY, province of Delhi (N. W. India). ceded to the East India company by the ruler of Oude in 1801. A mutiny at Bareilly, the capital, was suppressed in April, 1816. On 7 May, 1858, it was taken from the cruel sepoy rebels.

BARFLEUR (N. France), where William, duke of Normandy, equipped the fleet by which he conquered England, 1066. Near it, William, duke of Normandy, son of Henry I., in his passage from Normandy, was shipwrecked, 25 Nov. 1120, when the prince, his bride, and many others perished. Barfleur was destroyed by the English in the campaign in which they won the battle of Crecy, 1346. The French navy was destroyed near the cape by admiral Russell, after the victory of La Hogue, 19 May, 1692.

BARI (S. Italy), the Barium of Horace, was, in the 9th century, a stronghold of the Saracens, and was captured by the emperor Louis II., a descendant of Charlemagne, in 871. In the 10th century it became subject to the eastern empire, and remained so till it was taken by Robert Guiscard, the Norman, about 1060. A great ecclesiastical council was held here on 1 Oct. 1098, when the Alioque article of the creed and the procession of the Holy Spirit were the subjects of discussion. Conflicts between the military and populace with bloodshed, 9 Jan. 1894; and 1898.

BARING ISLAND, Arctic Sea, discovered by captain Penny in 1850-1, and so named by him after sir Francis Baring, first lord of the admiralty in 1849.

BARIUM (Greek, barys, heavy), a metal found abundantly as carbonate and sulphate. The oxide baryta was first recognised as an earth distinct from lime by Scheele, in 1774; and the metal was first obtained by Humphry Davy, in 1808. Watts.

BARK, see Jesuits' Bark.

BARLAAMITES, followers of Barlaam, a learned Calabrian monk of the order of St. Basil, who maintained various peculiar tenets, attacked the Greek monks, supported the Latin against the Greek church in a controversy at Constantinople, 1337, and acted as the emperor's envoy in an attempt to reconcile the churches in 1339. Died about 1348.

BARMECIDES, a powerful Persian family, celebrated for virtue and courage, were massacred through the jealousy of the caliph Haroun-al-Raschid, about 802. His visier Giafar was a Barmecide. The phrase Barmecide (or imaginary) feast originated in the story of the barber's sixth brother, in the Arabian Nights' Entertainments.

BARNABITES, an order of monks, established in Milan about 1530, were much engaged in instructing youth, relieving the sick and aged, and converting heretics.

BARNARD'S, SIR JOHN, ACT (7 Geo. II., c. 8), entitled, "an act to prevent the infamous practice of stock-jobbing," was passed in 1734, and repealed in 1860. Sir John Barnard (born 1685, died 1764) was an eminent lord mayor of London. Barnard Peerage case, see Trials, 30 May, 1892.

BARNARDO HOMES (named National Waifs Association 1899). Dr. T. J. Barnardo, of German extraction, born in Ireland, came to London, and in 1866 began energetically to promote the welfare of homeless children.

His home for boys at Stepney, founded 1870, was followed by one for girls, at Barkingside, Essex, with infirmary, schools, &c.; all were reported successful in 1874.

A Babies' Castle at Hawkhurst, Kent, for 100 infants, opened 9 Aug. 1886.

His disinterestedness and management having been impugned, he gave up the management to trustees, and invited investigation. The arbiters (Canon Miller and Messrs. J. B. Maule and Wm. Graham) in their report, after commenting on the imperfect evidence, commended the charities, and generally exonerated Dr. Barnardo, 15 Oct. 1877.

See Coffer Princes and East End Juvenile Mission.

Several legal decisions, requiring Dr. Barnardo to produce children who had been committed to his charge, were pronounced, 1889-91.

Here, at Gladsmore heath, Edward IV. gained a decisive victory over the Lancastrians, on Easter-day, 14 April, 1471, when the earl of Warwick and his brother the marquis of Montague, or Montague, were killed. BARODA. See India, 1874-5, 1892, 1896.

BAROMETERS. Torricelli, a Florentine, knowing that water did not rise in a pump through what was supposed to be nature's abhorrence of a vacuum, imitated the action of a pump with mercury, and made the first barometer, about 1643. Pascal's experiments (1646) enhanced the value of the discovery by applying it to the measurement of heights. Wheel barometers were contrived in 1668; pendent barometers in 1695; marine in 1700; and many improvements have been made since. In the aneroid barometer (from a, no, and neros, watery) no liquid is employed; the atmospheric pressure being exerted on a metallic spring. Its invention (attributed to Conté, in 1798, but due to Vidi, who died in April, 1866) excited much attention in 1848-9. Barometers were placed at N.E. coast stations in 1860, by the duke of Northumberland and others.

Mr. James B. Jordan's very delicate glycerine barometer, in which one inch is expanded to nearly eleven inches, was described to the Royal Society 22 Jan., 1880, and was set up during the year at Kew and other places. The publication of two-hourly variations of one at the office began in the Times 25 Oct. 1880.

A new very delicate barometer, invented by Mr. C. O. Bartrum and made by Mr. J. J. Hicks, of Hatton Garden, London, announced Aug. 1894.

Col. H. Watkin's mountain aneroid and others described Times, 17 Dec., 1898.

BARON, formerly the only title in our peerage, now the lowest. Its original name in England, Vavasour, was changed by the Saxons into Thane, and by the Normans into Baron. The council of the realm was composed of the greater barons, the lesser barons were merely tenants of the crown. Many barons had undoubtedly assisted in, or been summoned to parliament (in 1205); but the first precept found is of no higher date than the 49 Hen. III. 1205. The first raised to this dignity by patent was John de Beauchamp, created baron of Kidderminster, by Richard II., 1387. The barons took arms against king John, and compelled him to grant the great charter of our liberties, and the charter of our forests, at Runnymede, near Windsor, June, 1215. Charles II. granted a coronet to barons on his restoration, 1660.

BARON AND FEMME, or FEMME, terms of Norman-French origin, used in English law signifying husband and wife.

BARONETS, the first in rank among the gentry, and the only knighthood that is hereditary, were instituted by James I., 1611. The rebellion in Ulster gave rise to this order, it having been required of a baronet, on his creation, to pay into the exchequer as much as would maintain "thirty soldiers three years at eightpence a day in the province of Ulster in Ireland." It was further required that a baronet should be a gentleman born, and have a clear estate of 1000*l.* per annum. The first baronet was sir Nicholas Bacon (his descendant, sir H. B. Bacon, is styled Primus Baronetorum Anglorum), 22 May, 1611. The baronets of Ireland were created in 1619; the first being sir Francis Blundell.—Baronets of Nova Scotia were created, 1625; sir Robert Gordon the first baronet.—All baronets created since the Irish union in 1801 are of the United Kingdom. Hon. Society of Baronetage formed, 26 Jan., first annual meeting, 22 July, 1898, presents memorial to the government against unauthorised assumption of the title of baronet, June, 1903.—"Complete Baronetage," by C. E. Cokayne, publication commenced 1900.

BARONS' WAR, arose in consequence of the faithlessness of Henry III. and the oppression of his favourites in 1258. The barons, headed by Simon de Montfort, earl of Leicester, and Gilbert de Clare, earl of Gloucester, met at Oxford in 1262, and enacted statutes to which the king objected. In 1263 their disputes were in vain referred to the decision of Louis IX. of France. War broke out, and on 14 May, 1264, the king's party was totally defeated at Lewes; and De Montfort became the virtual ruler of the kingdom. The war was renewed; and at the battle of Evesham, 4 Aug. 1265, De Montfort was slain, and the barons were defeated; but they did not render their final submission till 1268. A history of this war was published by Mr. W. H. Blauw, in 1844; 2nd ed., 1871.

BARRACKS (from "Baraque—Hutte que font les soldats en campagne pour se mettre à couvert") were not numerous in this country until about 1789. A superintendent-general was appointed in 1793, and barracks built in the garrison towns and central points of the empire.—A report on the state of barracks, in 1858, led to their improvement under Mr. Sidney (afterwards lord) Herbert; see Aldershot. Mr. E. Stanhope's scheme for increase and improvement of barracks, camps, &c. (to cost about 4,100,000*l.*) submitted to the commons, 27 Feb.; the Barracks Act passed, 25 July, 1850; new model barracks on the cubicle system begun in Windsor, 1909.

BARRAGE. See under Nile.

BARRATRY is a general term for the stirring up suits and quarrels among the people. Maintenance is an officious intermeddling in a quarrel or suit; by assisting either party with money or otherwise. It is punishable by old statutes (of Richard II., and others), with fine and imprisonment. Champerty is an illegal bargain with either plaintiff or defendant to share in the profits of the matter in dispute.

Mr. Bradlaugh's action against Mr. Newdigate for maintenance in the case of Clarke v. Bradlaugh (see Parliament, 1881) was dismissed, 20 Sept. 1881.

BARREL-ORGANS, see Organs.

BARRICADES, mounds formed of trees and earth, for military defence. During the wars of the League in France, in 1588, the people made barricades by means of chains, casks, &c., and compelled the royal troops to retire. During the war of the Fronde, a barricade was erected in Paris on 27 Aug. 1648. Barricades composed of overturned vehicles, &c., were erected in Paris in the insurrections of 27-30 July, 1830, and 23-26 June, 1848, when sanguinary conflicts took place; and also 2 Dec. 1851.

BARRIER TREATIES. The first, between England and the Netherlands, was signed at the Hague, 29 Oct. 1709, for mutual support; annulled 1712; another treaty was concluded at Utrecht, 29 Jan. 1713. The third, by which the Low Countries were ceded to the emperor Charles VI., was signed by the British, Imperial, and Dutch ministers, 15 Nov. 1715.

BARRISTERS are said to have been first appointed by Edward I., about 1291, but there is earlier mention of professional advocates. They are of various ranks, as king's or queen's counsel, sergeants, &c., which see. Students for the bar must keep a certain number of terms at the inns of court, previously to being called; and by the regulations of 1853 must pass a public examination. See Women, 1900.

A committee of the bar, formed about 1885 to protect the rights of barristers in relation to the Inns of Court, merged into the general council. At a meeting of the bar in Lincoln's Inn hall, called by the general council, a compromise was arranged. The Inns of Court agreed to give an annual contribution of 600*l.* to the bar, 19 June, 1885.

BARROSA, or BAROSSA (S. Spain). The British army, commanded by major-general sir Thomas Graham, afterwards lord Lynedoch, totally defeated the French under marshal Victor, 5 March, 1811, the French leaving nearly 3000 dead, six pieces of cannon, and an eagle, the first that the British had taken; the loss of the British was 1169 men killed and wounded.

BARROW-IN-FURNESS (Lancashire), in 1847, was a village with a population of about 330, which, in 1867, had increased to above 17,000, and in 1874 to 35,000, in consequence of the large manufacture of iron from the ore (hematite) found there. On 19 Sept. 1867, new docks were opened in the presence of the dukes of Devonshire and Buccleuch (proprietors of the land), Mr. Gladstone, and others. Barrow was made a municipal borough in 1867. Sir James Ramsden, an eminent promoter of the prosperity of the town and its first mayor, died, aged 74, 19 Oct. 1896. Population in 1801, 57,584; 1909 (est.), 62,996.

BARROW ISLAND (Arctic Sea), discovered by Captain Penny in 1850-51, and named by him in honour of John Barrow, Esq., son of sir John.

BARROWISTS, a name given to the Brownists, which see.

BARROWS, circular or oblong mounds, found in Britain and other countries, were ancient sepulchres. Sir Richard Hoare caused several barrows near Stonehenge to be opened; in them were found Celtic ornaments, such as beads, buckles, and brooches, in amber, wood, and gold; Nov. 1808. 230 barrows were opened and discoveries made, chiefly in Yorkshire, 1866 et seq., under the superintendence of the rev. canon Wm. Greenwell, who published his elaborate work, "British Barrows," in December, 1877.

Barrows at Aldbourne, North Wilts, were opened by canon Greenwell and rev. Walter Money, Sept.-Oct. 1878.

Canon Greenwell gave urns and other results of his explorations to the British museum in 1879.

BARROWS'S STRAITS (N. Arctic Sea), explored by Edwd. Parry, as far as Melville island, lat. 74° 26' N., and long. 113° 47' W. The strait, named after sir John Barrow, was entered on 2 Aug., 1819. The thermometer was 55° below zero of Fahrenheit.

BARS in music appear in Agricola's "Musical Instrumentalis," 1529; and in Morley's "Practical Music," 1597, for score music. Henry Lawes used them in his "Ayres and Dialogues," 1653.

BARTHOLOMEW, ST., THE APOSTLE, martyred 71. The festival (24 Aug. o.s., 3 Sept. N.S.) is said to have been instituted 1130.

BASEDOW SYSTEM of education, having as its leading idea "everything according to nature," was inaugurated by Johann Bernard Basedow (1723-90), a German educational reformer, under the auspices of Prince Leopold of Anhalt-Dessau. In 1774 an educational institution called the Philanthropium was opened by Basedow, unsectarian in its character for the pursuit of intellectual, moral, and physical studies. He retired from its direction 1778, and the school was closed in 1793. The system led, however, to a reform of the earlier methods of education in Germany.

The origin of the Basque language, like its ethnology, is very obscure; it is polysynthetic, and no connection between it and any other language has yet been determined.

BATHS were early used in Asia and Greece, and introduced by Agrippa into Rome, where many were constructed by Augustus and his successors. The thermæ of the Romans and gymnasia of the Greeks (of which baths formed merely an appendage)

BAUTZEN, a town in Saxony, near which desperate battles were fought 20, 21, and 22 May, 1813, between the French, commanded by Napoleon, and the allies under the emperor of Russia and the king of Prussia. The struggle commenced on the 19th, with a contest on the outposts, which cost each army a loss of above 2000 men. On the 20th (at Bautzen) the French were more successful; and on the 21st (at Wurschen) the allies were compelled to retire; but Napoleon obtained no permanent advantage. Duroc was killed at Reichenbach by a cannon-ball, on 22 May.

BAVARIA (part of ancient Noricum and Vin-delicia), a kingdom in South Germany, conquered from the Celtic Gauls (Boii) by the Franks between 630 and 660. The country was afterwards governed by dukes subject to the French monarchs. Tasilon II. was deposed by Charlemagne, who established margraves in 788. The margrave Leopold, 895, father of Arnulph the Bad, is styled the first duke. Bavaria made a kingdom in 1805, was made a constitutional monarchy, 26 May, 1818. BAZAINE, MARSHAL, trial, &c., Dec. 1873 and Aug. 1874. See Metz and France.

BAZEILLES, a village in the Ardennes, N.E. France. During the dreadful battle of Sedan, 1 Sept. 1870, Bazeilles was burnt by the Bavarians, and atrocious outrages were said to have been committed. Of nearly 2000 inhabitants it was asserted scarcely fifty remained alive, and these indignantly denied having given provocation. Much controversy ensued, and in July, 1871, gen. Von der Tann asserted correctly that the number of deaths had been grossly exaggerated, that there had been much provocation, and denied the alleged cruelties.

BAZOCHE-DES-HAUTES, near Orleans, central France. Here a part of the army of the Loire, under gen. D'Aurelle de Paladines, was defeated after a severe action, by the Germans under the grand-duke of Mecklenburg, 2 Dec. 1870. See Orleans.

BEACHY HEAD, a promontory, S. E. Sussex, near which the British and Dutch fleet, commanded by the earl of Torrington, was defeated by a superior French force under admiral Tourville, 30 June, 1690; the allies suffered very severely. The Dutch lost two admirals, 500 men, and several ships—sunk to prevent them from falling into the hands of the enemy; the English lost two ships and 400 men.

BEACONS, see Lighthouses, Jubilee, 1887.

BEACONSFIELD ADMINISTRATION, see Disraeli and People's Tribute.

BEADS were early used in the east for reckoning prayers. St. Augustin mentions them 366. About 1090, Peter the Hermit is said to have made a series of 55 beads. To Dominic de Guzman is ascribed the invention of the Rosary (a series of 15 large and 150 small beads), in honour of the Blessed Virgin, about 1202. Beads soon after were in general use. The Bead-roll was a list of deceased persons, for the repose of whose souls a certain number of prayers was recited. Beads have been found in British barrows.

BEAM AND SCALES. The apparatus for weighing goods was so called, "as it weighs so much at the king's beam." A public beam was set up in London, and all commodities ordered to be weighed by the city officer, called the weigh-master, who was to do justice between buyer and seller, stat. 3 Edw. II. 1309. Stow. Beams and scales, with weights and measures, were ordered to be examined by the justices at quarter sessions, 35 Geo. III. 1794; see Weights and Measures.

BEANS, BLACK AND WHITE, were used by the ancients in gathering the votes of the people for the election of magistrates. A white bean signified absolution, and a black one condemnation. The precept of Pythagoras to abstain from beans, abstine a fabis, has been variously interpreted. "Beans do not favour mental tranquillity." Cicero. The finer kinds of beans were brought here with other vegetables, in Henry VIII.'s reign.

BEAR-BAITING, an ancient popular English sport, prohibited by parliament in 1835.

BEARDS.* The Egyptians did not wear beards; the Assyrians did. They have been worn for centuries by the Jews, who were forbidden to mar their beards, 1490 B.C. Lev. xix. 27. The Tartars waged a long war with the Persians, declaring them infidels, because they would not cut their beards, after the custom of Tartary. The Greeks wore their beards till the time of Alexander, who ordered the Macedonians to be shaved, lest the beard should give a handle to their enemies, 330 B.C. Beards were worn by the Romans, 390 B.C. The emperor Julian wrote a diatribe (entitled "Misopogon") against wearing beards, A.D. 362.—In England, they were not fashionable after the conquest, 1066, until the 13th century, and were discontinued at the Restoration. Peter the Great enjoined the Russians, even of rank, to shave, but was obliged to keep officers on foot to cut off the beard by force. About 1851 the custom of wearing the beard increased in Great Britain until about 1890, when moustaches only became popular; after about 1905 it became the fashion to wear no hair of any kind on the face.

BEARER COMPANY, introduced in the British army 1873 for the removal of the wounded from the battle-field and to render first aid. On active service a company is attached to each division.

BEARN, S. France, the ancient Benecharnum, was held successively by the Romans, Franks, Goths, and Gascons, and became a hereditary viscounty in 819, under Centule I., son of Loup, duke of Gascony. From his family it passed to the houses—of Gabaret, 1134; of Moncade, 1170; of Foix, 1290; and of Bourbon, 1550. Its annexation to France was decreed by Henry IV., 1594; affirmed by Louis XIII., 1620.

BEARS and BULLS, see Stocks.

BEAUGÉ, see Anjou.

BEAULIEU, ABBEY OF, (reformed Benedictines) founded by king John, in the New Forest, Hampshire, in 1204, and dedicated to the Blessed Virgin, had the privilege of sanctuary. It afforded an asylum to Margaret, queen of Henry VI., after the defeat of the earl of Warwick at Barnet, 14 April, 1471; and to Perkin Warbeck, Sept. 1497.

BEAUMONT, a village near Sedan, department of Ardennes, N.E. France. BECK CASE, see Trials.

BECKET'S MURDER.* Thomas Becket, archbishop of Canterbury, was murdered at the altar, 29 Dec. 1170. The king was absolved of guilty knowledge of the crime in 1172, and did penance at the tomb in 1174. The bones of Becket were enshrined in gold and jewels in 1220. They were ordered to be burned in the reign of Henry VIII. 24 April, 1538. A stone coffin, supposed by some persons to contain Becket's bones (?), discovered in a crypt at Canterbury cathedral, Jan. 1888. The Merchant Adventurers were at one time termed "the Brotherhood of St. Thomas à Becket." A Roman catholic church at Canterbury, dedicated to him, was opened by cardinal Manning, 13 April, 1875.

BED. The ancients slept on skins. Beds were afterwards made of loose rushes, heather, or straw. The Romans are said to have first used feathers. An air-cushion is said to have been used by Helio-gabalus, 218-222; air-beds were in use in the 16th century. Feather-beds were in use in England in the reign of Henry VIII. The bedsteads of the Egyptians and later Greeks, like modern couches, became common among the Roman upper classes.

The ancient great bed at Ware, Herts, capable of holding twelve persons, is of the 16th cent. Referred to in Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.

A bedstead of gold was presented to queen Victoria on 2 Nov. 1859, by the Maharajah of Cashmere.

Air-beds and water-beds have been made since the manufacture of india-rubber cloth by Clark in 1813; and by Macintosh in 1822.

The stone is 5 ft. 6 in. square and 3 ft. thick, and weighs about 6 tons. The shaft of the cross, which is handsomely carved, is 17 ft. 5 in. long and is sunk 11 in. into the base. The headstone of the cross is 4 ft. 11 in. high, with a spread over the arms of 3 ft. 10 in. The total height from the level of the ground is 23 ft. 6 in. On the east side of the cross are extracts from two of Bede's works. The west side depicts scenes from his life, with which have been introduced some designs taken from the Lindis-

* Thomas Becket was born in 1119. His father Gilbert was a London trader, and his mother is stated to have been a convert from Mahometanism. He was educated at Oxford, and made archdeacon by Theobald, archbishop of Canterbury, who introduced him to the king, Henry II. He became chancellor in 1155, but on being elected archbishop of Canterbury in 1162, he resigned the chancellorship, to the great offence of the king. He opposed strenuously the constitutions of Clarendon in 1164, and fled the country; and in 1166, excommunicated all the clergy who agreed to abide by them. He and the king met at Fretville, in Touraine, on 22 July, 1170, and were formally reconciled. On his return he re-commenced his struggle with the king, which led to his tragical death, after which he was canonized.

farne Gospel and from ancient stones preserved at Monkwearmouth. On the south side busts of the friends and associates of Bede are represented in relief. His love of nature and poetic genius are symbolised by birds, animals, and a harp. With the exception of Bede's tomb in Durham cathedral, this cross is the only memorial to one of the greatest of Englishmen, who, in a barbarous age, may be said to have laid the foundation of our recorded history and of English Letters. The cross was unveiled by Dr. MacLagan, Archbishop of York, at Roker Point, Sunderland, near Wearmouth, 11 Oct. 1904.

BEDER (Arabia). Here Mahomet gained his first victory (over the Koreish of Mecca), 623. It was considered to be miraculous.

BEEF-EATERS, see Battle-axe.

"BEEF STEAKS, the Sublime Society of," was established in 1735 by Rich, an actor at Covent Garden Theatre, in the painting-room of which the members dined upon beef-steaks. The society became fashionable, and long included among its members the prince of Wales, royal dukes, and other eminent persons, who submitted to its somewhat ludicrous regulations. It became extinct in 1867, its last place of meeting being a room in the Lyceum theatre. Its history was published by Brother Arnold in 1871.

BEEHIVE HOUSES, are primitive dwellings of an unknown antiquity found in Scotland and Ireland. They are constructed with undressed stones and without mortar, conical in shape, with a hole at the top of the roof.

BEER. The manufacture of beer and intoxicating liquors of kindred nature is of very high antiquity. A kind of beer was brewed from barley by the Egyptians as early as 3000 B.C. Herodotus ascribes its invention to the goddess Isis, and Xenophon refers to the use of beer in Armenia. Pliny mentions an intoxicating liquor made of corn and water in common use among the peoples of Western Europe, including the Gauls. Mead and cider were chiefly drunk in Britain prior to the Roman invasion. In the 8th cent. ale booths were subject to legal regulations. Beer is manufactured in a primitive manner from millet by native tribes in Africa, and from maize by the Indians of South America. There are numerous varieties of beer (including ale) consumed in Britain, known as "pale ale," "bitter beer," "mild ale," &c., the most celebrated of the mild ales being those manufactured at Burton-on-Trent. Porter and stout, dark-coloured varieties of beer, are produced chiefly in London and Dublin. "Lager beer," a German beer, which in recent years has come into use in this country, is also manufactured in England and in America. The annual consumption of beer in gallons per head in the various countries of Europe and in the United States and Canada is shown as under:—Belgium, 36.00; United Kingdom, 26.27; Germany, 20.00; United States, 14.14; Denmark, 11.65; Holland, 8.40; Austria-Hungary, 7.10; Norway, 6.36; Switzerland, 5.87; France, 5.21; Sweden, 4.20; Canada, 3.17; Russia, 0.84; Italy, 0.18. Beer and ale exported from the United Kingdom: 1876, 484,919 barrels; 1880, 412,192; 1890, 503,221; 1903, 510,806; 1908, 551,051. Excise duty on beer (1803) 6s. 3d. per barrel; addition of 6d. June, 1804; raised to 1s. April, 1900; 7s. 9d. in 1909. Beer, for purposes of taxation, is defined by the inland revenue acts of 1880 and 1885. Adulteration, or addition of anything except finings for clarification, or even the mixing of small beer with strong beer, incurs a fine of 50*l.* and forfeiture of the beer. In the case of a beer-seller conviction of adulteration is registered and may be endorsed on his licence; see Ale, Brewers, Porter, Victuallers, Arsenic.

BEES. Mount Hybla, on account of its odiferous flowers, thyme, and abundance of honey, has been poetically called the "empire of bees." Hymettus, in Attica, was also famous for its bees and honey. The economy of bees was admired in the earliest ages; and Eumelus, of Corinth, wrote a poem on bees, 741 B.C. Bees were introduced into Boston, New England, in 1670, and have since spread over the continent. Mandeville's satirical "Fable of the Bees" appeared in 1723. Huber published his observations on bees in 1792. The Apian Society had an establishment at Muswell Hill, near London (1860-2). The Ligurian variety of the honey-bee was successfully introduced into England in 1860.

A British Beekeepers' Association founded 10 May (Sir John Lubbock, Bart. presiding, 1904) became first a society; first exhibition, at Crystal Palace, 1 Sept. 1874, at other places since.

Synaldis bees, of American origin, introduced into London in autumn of 1874; first at Holloway. Geographical, musical, and other bees began early in 1876.

BEES, ST., Cumberland. A monastery was founded here by St. Bega, 650; a grammar school by abp. Grindal, 1583; a clerical training college by bp. Law, 1817.

BEET-ROOT is extensively grown in England. Beta vulgaris, red beet, is used for the table as a salad. Margraff first produced sugar from the white beet-root in 1747. M. Achard produced excellent sugar from it in 1799; and the chemists of France, at the instance of Bonaparte, largely extracted sugar from the beet-root in 1800. More than half the sugar consumed in France is now manufactured in that country from beet. It is also largely manufactured in other countries, especially in Germany.

BEGGARS were tolerated in ancient times, being often musicians and ballad-singers. In 1388, 1530, 1535, 1547-50 severe laws were passed against them. By 14 Eliz., c. 5, 1572, sturdy beggars were ordered to be "grievously whipped and burnt through the right ear;" punished capitally for the third offence: acts consolidated 1731. By the Vagrant Act (1824), 5 Geo. IV. c. 83, all public beggars are liable to a month's imprisonment. See Poor Laws, Mendicity Society, and Vagrants. The "BEGGAR'S OPERA," by John Gay, a satire against the government of sir Robert Walpole, was produced at the Lincoln's-inn-fields theatre, 29 Jan. 1727-8, and had a run of 63 nights; see Guenx.

BEGUINES, a congregation of nuns first established at Liège, and afterwards at Nivelles, in 1207, some say 1226. The "Grand Beguinage" of Bruges was the most extensive. Some of these nuns imagined that they could become sinless. The council of Vienne condemned this error, and abolished a branch of the order in 1311. They still exist in Germany and Belgium, acting as nurses to the sick and wounded, &c.

BEHEADING, the Decollatio of the Romans, introduced into England from Normandy (as a less ignominious mode of putting high criminals to death) by William the Conqueror, 1076, when Waltheof, earl of Huntingdon, Northampton, and Northumberland, was first so executed. Afterwards this mode of execution became frequent, particularly in the reigns of Henry VIII., Mary, and Elizabeth, when even women of the noblest blood thus perished; the aged countess of Salisbury, 27 May, 1541; lady Jane Grey, 12 Feb. 1554.

BEHISTUN, in Persia. At this place is a rock containing important inscriptions of Darius Hystaspes about 518 B.C., in three languages, in cuneiform (or wedge-shaped) characters, which were deciphered and translated by sir H. Rawlinson in 1844-6, and published in the Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society.

BEHRING'S STRAIT, discovered by captain Vitus Behring, a Danish navigator in the service of Russia. He thus proved that the continents of Asia and America are distant from each other about thirty-nine miles, 1728. He died at Behring's island in 1741. In 1778 captain James Cook surveyed the coasts of both continents. See United States, 1880-91.

The czar Alexander I., in 1821, declared the Behring seas closed to foreign fishing; this was at once repudiated by Mr. J. Quincy Adams, secretary of the United States. Alaska was purchased in 1867 from Russia, by the States, who afterwards assumed the Russian claim upon the seas, and seized the British Columbia sealing vessels. The seizure of the Blond, a Canadian sealer by the U.S. revenue cutter Rush, 3 July, was declared legal by Mr. Secretary Blaine, U.S., 1 Aug. 1889; while the British government claimed, as heretofore, the right of fishing in waters beyond the territorial limits. The governments agreed to refer the question to arbitration, Feb. 1890. President Harrison proclaimed the Behring sea closed to unlicensed seal fishing, 25 March. A Blue Book was published, 15 Aug., containing the correspondence between the two governments from 1 Sept. 1886, to 2 Aug. 1890. The marquis of Salisbury demanded that, pending arbitration, British sealing vessels should not be molested, adding that if so, they should be protected, 2 Aug. 1890.

BELGRADE, capital of Servia, a city on the right bank of the Danube. It was taken from the Greek emperor by Solomon, king of Hungary, in 1072; gallantly defended by John Huniades against the Turks, under Mahomet II., July to Sept. 1456, when the latter was defeated, with the loss of 40,000 men. Belgrade was taken by sultan Solymán, Aug. 1521, and retaken by the Imperials in 1688, from whom it was again taken by the Turks, 1690. It was besieged in May, 1716, by prince Eugene. In that year the Turkish army, 200,000 strong, approached to relieve it, and on 5 Aug. a sanguinary battle was fought at Peterwaradin, in which the Turks lost 20,000 men. Eugene defeated the Turks here, 16 Aug. 1717, and Belgrade surrendered 18 Aug. In 1739 it was ceded to the Turks, after its fine fortifications had been demolished. It was retaken in 1789, and restored at the peace of Reichenbach, in 1790. The Servian insurgents had possession of it, 1806-13. In 1815 it was placed under prince Milosh, subject to Turkey. The fortifications were restored in 1820. On 19 June, 1862, the Turkish pasha was dismissed for firing on the town during a riot. The university was established by private munificence, 1863. The fortress was surrendered by the Turks to the Servians, 18 April, 1867. The independence of Servia proclaimed here, 22 Aug. 1878. Fatal rioting 5 April, 1903. Revolt by officers of the army, king Alexander I. and queen Draga murdered in their palace between 12 and 2 a.m., 10 June, 1903. Ministers, guards and officers loyal to the king, with the two brothers of the queen, also killed. Prince Peter Karageorgevich made king. He swore fealty to the constitution at Belgrade 25 June. The leading assassins promoted in rank July, 1903. Population in 1905, 140,129. See Servia.

BELGRAVIA, a south-western district of the metropolis, built between 1826 and 1852 upon land belonging to the marquís of Westminster, who is also viscount Belgrave.

BELL, BOOK, AND CANDLE: in the Romish ceremony of excommunication (which see), the bell is rung, the book is closed, and candle extinguished; the effect being to exclude the excommunicated from the society of the faithful, divine service, and the sacraments. Its origin is ascribed to the 8th century.

BELL ROCK LIGHTHOUSE, nearly in front of the Frith of Tay, one of the finest in Great Britain; it is 115 feet high, is built upon a rock that measures 427 feet in length, and 200 feet in breadth, and is about 12 feet under water.* It was erected in 1806-10. It has two bells for hazy weather.

BELLAIR, North America. The town was attacked by the British forces under sir Peter Parker, who, after an obstinate engagement, was killed, 30 Aug. 1814.

BELLEISLE, an isle on the south coast of Brittany, France, erected into a duchy for marshal Belleisle, in 1742, in reward of his military and diplomatic services, by Louis XV. Belleisle was taken by the British forces under commodore Keppel and general Hodgson, after a desperate resistance, 7 June, 1761, but was restored to France in 1763.

BELLES-LETTRES, or POLITE LEARNING, see Academies, and Literature.

BELLEVILLE, the red republican stronghold of Paris, defended by seven barricades, was captured by L'Admirault and Vinoy, 27, 28 May, 1871, when the insurrection was suppressed.

BELLEVILLE BOILERS, final report of Admiralty committee on navy boilers, issued, Aug., 1904; see Navy Boilers.

BELLITE, a Swedish explosive invented by Mr. Carl Lamm in 1885.

BELLMEN, appointed in London to proclaim the hour of the night before public clocks became general, were numerous about 1556. They were to ring a bell at night, and cry, "Take care of your fire and candle, be charitable to the poor, and pray for the dead."

BELLOWS. Anacharsis, the Scythian, is said to have been the inventor of them, about 569 B.C.; and to him is ascribed the invention of tinder, the potter's wheel, anchors for ships, &c. Bellows * Upon this rock, it is said, the abbots of Aberbrothach (now the Isle of Bute) held, so that it was rung by the purpose of the sea, thus warning mariners. It is also said that a Dutchman, who took the apparatus away, was here lost with his ship and crew.

were not used in the furnaces of the Romans. The great bellows of our foundries must have been early used; see Blowing Machines.

BELLS were used among the Jews, Greeks, and Romans. The responses of the Dodonean oracle were in part conveyed by bells. Strabo. The monument of Porsenna was decorated with pinnacles, each surmounted by bells. Pliny. Said to have been introduced by Paulinus, bishop of Nola, in Campagna, about 400; and first known in France in 550. The army of Clothaire II., king of France, was frightened from the siege of Sens by the ringing of the bells of St. Stephen's church. The second excerpt of our king Egbert commands every priest, at the proper hours, to sound the bells of his church. Bells were used in churches by order of pope John IX., about 900, as a defence, by ringing them, against thunder and lightning. Bells are mythically said to have been cast by Turketul, abbot of England, about 941. The celebrated "Song of the Bell," by Schiller (died 1805), has been frequently translated. The following list is that given by Mr. E. Beckett-Denison (afterwards Lord Grimthorpe) in his discourse on bells at the Royal Institution, 6 March, 1857. The lecture of the Rev. H. R. Haweis, at the same place, 7 Feb., 1879, was well illustrated. See Imperial Institute.

* The metal has been valued at the lowest estimate at £66,565. Gold and silver are said to have been thrown in as votive offerings.

† The largest bell in England (named Big Ben, after sir Benjamin Hall, the then chief commissioner of works), cast at Houghton-le-Spring, Durham, by Messrs. Warner, under the superintendence of Mr. E. Beckett-Denison, and the Rev. W. Taylor, at an expense of 3343*l.* 14*s.* 9*d.* The composition was 22 parts copper and 7 tin. The diameter was 9 ft. 5½ in.; the height, 7 ft. 10½ in. The clapper weighed 12 cwt. See W. Taylor.

‡ The bell "Big Ben" having been found to be cracked on 4 Oct. 1857, it was broken up and another bell cast with the same metal, in May, 1858, by Messrs. Mears, Whitechapel. It is rather different in shape from its predecessor, "Big Ben," and about 2 tons lighter. Its diameter is 9 ft. 6 in.; the height 7 ft. 10 in. It was struck for the first time, 18 Nov. 1858. The clapper weighs 6 cwt.—half that of the former bell. The note of the bell is E natural; the quarter-bells being G, B, E, F. On 1 Oct. 1859, this bell was also found to be cracked.

§ The clapper of St. Paul's bell weighs 180 lbs.; the diameter of the bell is 10 feet (Mr. Walsley says 6 ft. 9½ in.), and its thickness 10 in. The hour strikes upon this bell, the quarters upon two smaller ones; see Chicks.

¶ Height, 8 feet 10 in.; diameter, 3 feet 6½ in.; note E; materials tin and copper; cost about 300*l.*; cast by Mr. Taylor, at Loughborough; raised to its place 31 May, dedicated 3 June, 1882.

|| Height, 14½ feet; diameter at the mouth 11½ feet; note C; or D; materials chiefly French cannon; cast by Andreas Hamm of Frankenthal; dedicated July, 1837.

BAPTISM OF BELLS.—They were anointed and baptized in churches, it is said, from the 10th century. Du Fresnoy. The bells of the priory of Little Dunmow, in Essex, were baptized by the names of St. Michael, St. John, Virgin Mary, Holy Trinity, &c., in 1501. Weerer. The great bell of Notre Dame, of Paris, was baptized by the name of duke of Angoulême, 1516. On the continent, in Roman Catholic states, they baptize bells as we do ships, but with religious solemnity. Ashe.

RINGING OF BELLS, in changes of regular peals, is almost peculiar to the English. Stow.

"Companie of the Schollers of Chesepide," 1603; "Society of College Youths," 1637; "Society of Cumberland-lands," 1683; the "Society of Union Scholars," 1713; the "Society of Eastern Scholars," 1733; "London Youths," 1753; "Westminster Youths," 1776.

Fabian Stedman, about 1650, invented a system known as "Stedman's principle." Benjamin Anable soon after invented "Grandshire Triples."

720 changes can be rung in an hour upon 12 bells; 479,001,600 changes rung upon them, require 75 years, 10 months, and 10 days.

Nell Gwynne left the ringers of the bells of St. Martin's-in-the-fields money for a weekly entertainment, 1687, and many others have done the same.

A central council of Church Bell Ringers, representing many societies, was established at the Inns of Court hotel, London, 10 April, 1890.

CARILLONS, a collection of bells, arranged in two or three chromatic scales, played by pedals or keyboards, or by machinery. The first set is said to have been made at Alost in Flanders, in 1487, and that country and Holland are renowned for carillons. Matthias van den Gheyn was an eminent maker (1721-85). Excellent carillon machines are now made by Messrs. Gillett, Bland & Co., Croydon. One at Manchester was started 1 Jan. 1870. It plays 35 tunes on 20 bells.

SUBMARINE SIGNALLING.—Electrical submarine bell installed by the submarine signal company at Tariffa, worked by a dynamo in the lighthouse at Tariffa with a cable extending a quarter of a mile off the shore into 20 fathoms of water, the action of the hammer being controlled by powerful electric magnets inside the bell casing. Similar electric bells have been in use along the Canadian coast during 1907; and Sept. 1908.

Three forms of bells employed in Jan. 1900—the electric bell operated by an electric current from the shore; the pneumatic bell employed in lightships or at the end of a pier; the bell-buoy operated by the action of the waves. In order that ships may receive the submarine signals it is necessary that they should be equipped with the usual tanks with immersed microphones.

Application of submarine bell-signalling to intership communication; tests reported successfully carried out; 100 submarine bells placed in position and 500 ships equipped with the receiving apparatus up to Jan. 1900.

Material assistance rendered in saving the passengers of the Republic through the agency of the submarine signalling apparatus. The vessels were in a thick fog, with no possible guidance above water. (See Wrecks, 1900.) The apparatus adopted by the L. and N.W. railway, so that all vessels of their fleet, plying between Holyhead and Dublin, have been fitted with the receiving apparatus; Trinity House placed a submarine bell off the North Stack, Holyhead, and the commissioners of the Irish lights equipped the Kish lightship. June-Sept. 1900.

The "Edward" bell, presented by the duchess of Norfolk to the Westminster cathedral, was cast at the Whitechapel Bell Foundry, 30 April, 1910. Submarine signal receivers fitted into submarines in the navies of England, Germany, United States, France and Japan (article, Times, 21 June.) June, 1910.

BELOOCHISTAN, the ancient Gedrosia (S. Asia). Khelat, the capital, was taken by the British in the Afghan war, 1839; abandoned, July, 1840; taken and held a short time, Nov. 1840; area of British-administered territory is 46,692 sq. miles, and population about 350,000.

The khan was subsidised in 1854, under certain conditions, which were not observed; the arrangement was broken up in 1873; the negotiations of 1880 (after sir Robert Sandeman in 1875 were successful, and Quetta) was occupied by the British in 1877, and has since become a prosperous station. The Khan furnished assistance after the defeat of gen. Burrows in July, 1880.

Quetta, with districts of Pishin, Thal Chotiali, and Soth, annexed to British territories, and placed under a chief commissioner; announced, Nov. 1887.

BENARES, in India, a holy city of the Hindoos, abounding in temples. It was ceded by the nabob of Oude, Asoph-ud-Dowlah, to the English in 1775. An insurrection took place here, which had nearly proved fatal to the British interests in Hindostan, 1781. The rajah, Cheyt Sing, was deposed in consequence of it, in 1783. Mr. Cherry, capt. Conway, and others, were assassinated at Benares, by vizier Aly, 14 Jan. 1799. In June, 1857, col. Neil succeeded in suppressing attempts of the native infantry to join the mutiny; see India. BENBUBB, near Armagh (N. Ireland). Here O'Neill totally defeated the English under Monroe, 5 June, 1646. Moore says that it was "the only great victory since the days of Brian Boru achieved by an Irish chieftain in the cause of Ireland."

BENCOOLEN (Sumatra). The English East India company made a settlement here which preserved to them the pepper trade after the Dutch had dispossessed them of Bantam, 1682. Anderson. York fort was erected by the East India company, 1690. In 1693 a dreadful mortality raged here, occasioned by the town being built on a pestilential morass; among others the governor and council perished. The French, under count D'Estaing, destroyed the English settlement, 1760. Bencoolen was reduced to a residency under the government of Bengal, in 1801, and was ceded to the Dutch, in 1824, in exchange for their possessions in Malacca; see India.

BENDER, Bessarabia, European Russia. Near it was the asylum of Charles XII. of Sweden, after his defeat at Pultowa by the czar Peter the Great, 8 July, 1709. The peace of Bender was concluded in 1711. Bender was taken by storm, by the Russians, 28 Sept. 1770; was taken by Potemkin in 1789, and again in 1809. It was restored at the peace of Jassy, but retained at the peace of 1812.

BENEDICTINES, an order of monks founded by St. Benedict (lived 480-543), who introduced the monastic life into Western Europe, in 529, when he founded the monastery on Monte Casino in Campania, and eleven others afterwards. His Regula Monachorum (rule of the monks) soon became the common rule of western monachism. No religious order has been so remarkable for extent, wealth, and men of note and learning, as the Benedictine. Among its branches the chief were the Clunians, founded in 912; the Cistercians, founded in 1098, and reformed by St. Bernard, abbot of Clairvaux, in 1116; and the Carthusians, from the Chartreux (hence Charter-house), founded by Bruno about 1080. The Benedictine order was introduced into England by Augustin, in 596; and William I. built an abbey for it on the plain where the battle of Hastings was fought, 1066; see Battle-Abbey. William de Warrenne, earl of Warrenne, built a convent at Lewes, in Sussex, in 1077. Of this order it is reckoned that there have been 40 popes, 200 cardinals, 50 patriarchs, 116 archbishops, 4600 bishops, 4 emperors, 12 empresses, 46 kings, 41 queens, and 3600 saints. Their founder was canonised. Baronius. The Benedictines have taken little part in politics, but have produced many valuable literary works.

BENEFICE (literally a good deed or favour), or FIEF. Clerical benefices originated in the 12th century, when the priesthood began to imitate the feudal lay system of holding lands for performing certain duties: till then the priests were supported by alms and oblations at mass. Vicarages, rectories, perpetual curacies, and chaplaincies, are termed benefices, in contradistinction to dignities, such as bishoprics, &c. A rector is entitled to all the tithes; a vicar, to a small part or to none.—All benefices that should become vacant in the space of six months, were given by pope Clement VII. to his nephew, in 1534. Notitia Monastica. Union of Benefices (Metropolis) Act was passed in 1860; amended, 6 Aug. 1900. An act for the augmentation of poor benefices by the sale of some of those in the presentation of the lord chancellor, was passed in 1863, and an act respecting the sequestration of benefices and their union passed, 1871.

The Commission on Ecclesiastical Benefices reported, recommending amendments in sales of advowsons, discontinuance of sale by auction, &c. Nov. 1879. BENEVENTUM (now Benevento), an ancient city in South Italy, said to have been founded by Diomedes the Greek, after the fall of Troy. Pyrrhus of Macedon, during his invasion of Italy, was totally defeated near Beneventum, 275 B.C. Near it was erected the triumphal arch of Trajan, A.D. 114. Benevento was formed into a duchy by the Lombards, 571. At a battle fought here, 26 Feb. 1266, Manfred, king of Sicily, was defeated and slain by Charles of Anjou, who thus became virtually master of Italy. The castle was built 1323; the town was nearly destroyed by an earthquake, 1688, when the archbishop, afterwards pope Benedict XIII., was dug out of the ruins alive, and contributed to its subsequent rebuilding, 1703. It was seized by the king of Naples, but restored to the pope on the suppression of the Jesuits, 1773. Talleyrand de Périgord, Bonaparte's arch-chancellor, was made prince of Benevento, 1806. Benevento was taken by the French, 1798, and restored to the pope in 1815.

In 1615 Oliver St. John, M.P., was fined 5000*l.*, and chief justice Coke disgraced, for severely censuring such modes of raising money. Benevolences were declared illegal by the bill of rights, Feb. 1689.

* The effect of the proposals agreed upon, and introduced, 16 Oct., will be to create a new province, with the status of lieutenant-governorship, consisting of the Chittagong, Dacca, and Rajshahi divisions of Bengal, the district of Malda, the state of Hill Tipperah, and the present chief-commissionership of Assam. Darjeeling will remain with Bengal; the province will be entitled Eastern Bengal and Assam, its capital Dacca, with subsidiary headquarters at Chittagong. It will comprise an area of 106,540 sq. miles and a population of 31,000,000 (18,000,000 Mohammedans, 12,000,000 Hindus). It will possess a legislative council and a board of revenue of 2 members; the jurisdiction of the high court of Calcutta is undisturbed. The existing province of Bengal, diminished by the surrender of territory on the east and the 5 Hindi states of Chutta Nagpur, but increased by the acquisition of Sambalpur and the 5 Uriya states, will consist of 141,580 sq. miles, with a population of 54,000,000 (42,000,000 Hindus, 9,000,000 Mohammedans). The territory now comprising Bengal and Assam will thus be divided into two compact and self-contained provinces with clearly defined boundaries, and equipped with the resources of an advanced administration. Parliamentary Paper, 8 Aug. 1905.

Known in Japan since the middle of the 18th century under the name of kakke. It is also epidemic in Africa, the W. Indies, China, and India; but in the last two countries is now comparatively rare, and has been brought to England by sailors, and sometimes occurs among ships' crews long after they reach port. The cause of the disease is unknown, but is supposed to be due to unwholesome food; the disease itself is regarded as a form of peripheral neuritis, characterised by oppressive breathing, oedema, anemia, paralytic weakness and numbness in the lower limbs.

BERKELEY CASTLE, Gloucestershire, was begun by Henry I. in 1108, and finished in the next reign. Here Edward II. was cruelly murdered by the contrivance of his queen Isabella (a princess of France), and her paramour, Mortimer, earl of March, 21 Sept. 1327. Mortimer was hanged at the Elms, near London, 29 Nov. 1330; and Edward III. confined his mother in her own house at Castle Rising, near Lynn, in Norfolk, till her death, 1357.

In 1551 it was made independent of both kingdoms. The town surrendered to Cromwell in 1648, and to general Monk in 1659. Since the union of the crowns (James I. 1603), the strong fortifications have been neglected. The borough was absorbed into Northumberland in 1885 in respect to parliamentary elections. 4 The division of the Bible into chapters has been ascribed to archbishop Lanfranc in the 11th, and to archbishop Langton in the 13th century; but T. Hartwell Horne considers the real author to have been cardinal Hugo de Sancto Caro, about the middle of the 13th century. The division into sections was commenced by Rabbi Nathan (author of a Concordance), about 1445, and completed by Athras, a Jew, in 1661. The present division into verses was introduced by the celebrated printer, Robert Stephens, in his Greek Testament (1552) and in his Latin Bible (1556-7).

† Fragments of portions of this book, on leather, ascribed to have been written about the 8th century B.C., obtained from Arabs in Jerusalem by M. Shapira, were exhibited in the British Museum, Aug. 1883, and after a critical examination by Dr. Ginsburg and others, declared to be forgeries. M. Shapira, probably insane, committed suicide at Rotterdam, 19 March, 1884. The most ancient copy of the Hebrew Scriptures existed at Toledo, called the Codex of Hillel; it was of very early date, probably of the 4th century after Christ; some say about 60 years before Christ. The copy of Ben Asher, of Jerusalem, was made about 1100.

The reputed oldest copy of the Old and New Testament in Greek, is that in the Vatican, which was written in the 4th or 5th century. Mai's edition appeared in 1857. The next in age is the Alexandrian Codex (referred to the 5th century) in the British Museum, presented by the Greek patriarch to Charles I. in 1628. It has been printed in England, edited by Woide and Baber, 1786—1821.—Codex Ephraemi, or Codex Regius, ascribed to the 5th century, in the Royal Library, Paris: published by Tischendorf in 1843.

The Codex Sinaiticus, probably written in the 4th century, was discovered by M. Constantine Tischendorf, at St. Catherine's monastery in 1844 and 1859, and presented to the czar of Russia, at whose cost a splendid edition was published in 1862.

The Hebrew Psalter was printed at Bologna in 1477. The complete Hebrew Bible was first printed by Soncino in Italy in 1488, and the Greek Testament (edited by Erasmus) at Rotterdam, in 1516. Aldus's edition was printed in 1518; Stephens' in 1546; and the textus receptus (or received text) by the Elzevirs in 1624.

BILLIARDS (Old French billard, "a stick with a curved end"). The French ascribe the invention to Henrique Devigne, an artist, about 1571; the game was mentioned by Spenser about 1591, and by Shakespeare, 1607. It was described by Cotton in his "Compleat Gamester," 1674. Slate billiard tables were introduced in England in 1827; other changes since. American tournament (14 competitors) at the Egyptian hall, London, Jan. 1899. The game is now popular; tournaments frequently held.

The Champion Cup has been won since 1870: by W. Cook, 11 Feb. 1870, 25 May, 1871, 21 Nov. 1871, 4 March, 1872, 4 Feb. 1874; by J. Roberts, Jun., 14 April, 1870, 30 May, 1870, 30 Jan. 1871, 24 May, 1875, 20 Dec. 1875, 28 May, 1877, 30 March–1 April, 1885, 1–3 June, 1885; by J. Bennett, 28 Nov. 1870, 8 Nov. 1880, 12–13 Jan. 1881. From 1885 to 1898 J. Roberts, Jun., held undisputed claim to the title of champion, when in the last-named year he was challenged by C. Dawson, the match taking place under the new rules regulating the "spot stroke" and "push stroke," the width of the pockets, and the distance of the billiard spot from the top cushion. The new rules, framed by the Billiard Association, came into force 1 Oct. 1898. A match of 18,000 up was played March–April, 1899, between Roberts and Dawson, the former winning by 1,814 points.

The Amateur Billiard Championship, instituted in 1888, has since been won by Mr. H. A. O. Lonsdale 1888; Mr. A. P. Gaskell, 1888–9–90–91; Mr. W. D. Courtney, 1890–91; Mr. A. R. Wisdom, 1892–9, 1903; Mr. S. S. Christey, 1892–1901–3; Mr. A. H. Vahid, 1893; Mr. S. H. Fry, 1893–6–1900; Mr. H. Mitchell, 1894; Mr. T. Maughan, 1894; Mr. A. W. T. Good, 1902–5; Mr. W. A. Lovejoy, 1904; Mr. E. C. Bred, 1906; Mr. H. C. Vior, 1907–8; Major Fleming, 1909.

The duplicating of the dates in the foregoing list is due to the fact that the championship was competed for twice each year until it became an annual tournament in 1903.

Billiard Association Cup.—W. Mitchell beats C. Dawson by 837, 8–13 Jan. 1894; C. Dawson b. J. North, by 4,285, 9–14 Jan. 1899; C. Dawson b. H. W. Stevenson by 2,225, 16–21 April, 1900; H. W. Stevenson b. C. Dawson by 2,504, 31 Dec. 1900–Jan. 15, 1901; C. Dawson b. H. W. Stevenson by 3,204, 13–18 April, 1901; C. Dawson b. H. W. Stevenson by 300, 16–21 Mar. 1903; M. Inman b. A. E. Williams by 1,338, Mar. 1909.

The Highest Spot-Barred Breaks are: 1,467 by T. Taylor v. McNeil, Royal Aquarium, 24 April, 1891; 2,539 by F. C. Ines, Humphrey's hall, Knightsbridge, 1–2 June, 1893; 1,392 by J. Roberts, Jun. v. Diggle, at Manchester, 3–4 May, 1894; 985 by E. Diggle v. J. Roberts, Jun., Argyll hall, 4 Jan. 1895.

Highest Breaks in Exhibition Matches (ordinary tables): 3,394 (93, 3, 150, 123, 172, 400 spots) by W. J. Peall, at Westminster Aquarium, 4–6 Nov. 1896; 1,989 (649 spots) by W. J. Peall, at Cambridge, 19 May, 1884; 1,709 (18, 543 spots) by W. J. Peall, at Westminster Aquarium, 3, 4 Nov. 1885; 1,621 (536 spots) by W. Mitchell, at Westminster Aquarium, 3 Nov. 1885; 1,413 (334, 449, 3 spots) by W. J. Peall, at Westminster Aquarium, 4, 5 Nov. 1886; 189 successive cannons by H. W. Stevenson, at Waverley Market, Edinburgh, 30 Jan. 1895.

Highest Breaks on Standard Tables: 985 (spot-barred) by E. Diggle, at Argyll hall, 4 Jan. 1895; 772 (spot and push barred) by C. Dawson, at Argyll hall, 20, 21 Oct. 1899; 791 by E. Diggle, at Brighton, 24, 25 Feb. 1902; 821 by J. Roberts, Jun., at Argyll hall, Jan. 1905 (disallowed in consequence of the preliminary measurements of the table not having been made).

Highest Break under Billiard Association Rules: 802 by H. W. Stevenson v. C. Dawson, at the Grand Hall, 16 Feb., 1905.

Highest Break in Amateur Championship: 174 by G. A. Higinbottom, Leicester Square, 16 Mar., 1905.

Highest "Anchor" Stroke Break: 499,135, T. Reece, London, July, 1907.

Record Break under B.A. Rules: 499,135 (including 249,552 cradle cannons) by Tom Reece, in London, June 3 to July 6, 1907. This is a world's record under any conditions and on any type of table. The aggregate time taken by Reece was 85 hours, 49 mins.

John Roberts, the famous player, wins his farewell match at Hengler's Circus on his retirement, against E. Diggle, by 606, in which he concedes a start of 2,500 points in 18,000; final scores, Roberts 18,000, Diggle 17,394, 2 June, 1906.

The "anchor" or "cradle" cannon stroke was productive of immense breaks, which reached a climax in the game between T. Reece and J. Chapman of 500,000 up, 3 June–6 July. Reece's break, however, amounting to 499,135, was not officially recognized by the Billiard Association owing to play having been protracted into the night after the exclusion of the public, and was not accordingly "made in public." Reece's next best break of 40,001, 27 May–1 June, was beaten by W. Cook's 42,746 in June. The stroke was eventually barred by the Billiard Association to obviate the otherwise inevitable destruction of interest in the game by reason of the monotony of this stroke, 1907.

World's Record Break under B.A. Rules: 836 (831 off red ball) by George Grey, at Melbourne, Australia, Aug. 25, 1909.

BILLINGSGATE, the fish-market in London, is said to have derived its name from Belinus Magnus, a British prince, the father of king Lud, 400 B.C., but Stow thinks from a former owner. It was the old port of London, and the customs were paid here under Ethelred II., A.D. 979. Stow. Billingsgate was made a free market, 1609. Chamberlain. Fish by land-carriage, as well as sea-borne, now arrives daily here. In 1849, the market was extended and improved, and a new one was erected in 1852, Mr. Bunning, architect. Another new one, erected by Horace Jones, founded 27 Oct. 1874; completed Sept. 1876; lit by electric light, 25 Nov. 1878. Billingsgate market was declared to be insufficient for the fish supply of the metropolis in the report of the commission appointed by the city corporation, presented to the common council, 11 Aug. 1881.

BILLS OF EXCHANGE were invented by the Jews as a means of removing their property from nations where they were persecuted, 1160. Anderson. Bills are said to have been used in England, 1307. The only legal mode of sending money from England, 4 Richard II. 1381. Regulated, 1698; first stamped, 1782; duty advanced, 1797; again, June 1801; and since. It was made capital to counterfeit bills of exchange in 1734. In 1825, the year of disastrous speculations in bubbles, it was computed that there were 400 millions of pounds sterling represented by bills of exchange and promissory notes. The present amount is not supposed to exceed 50 millions. The many statutes regarding bills of exchange were consolidated by act 9 Geo. IV. 1828. An act regulating bills of exchange passed 3 Vict. July, 1839. Great alterations were made in the law on the subject by 17 & 18 Vict. c. 83 (1854), and 18 & 19 Vict. c. 67 (1855). Days of grace were abolished in the case of bills of exchange payable on sight in Aug. 1871. Forgery of bills to obtain discount was detected by the bank of England, 28 Feb., after 102,217 had been paid. The culprits (Americans) were tried and condemned to penal servitude for life, 26 Aug. 1873. See Trials, Aug. 1873.

A Bills of Exchange Act, declaring the law relating to bills of exchange, passed 10 April, 1877; new Act passed 12 Aug. 1882.

BILLS OF MORTALITY FOR LONDON.

These bills were first compiled by order of Cromwell, about 1538, 30 Hen. VIII., but in a more formal and recognised manner in 1603, after the great plague of that year. No complete series of them has been preserved. They have been superseded by the weekly returns of the registrar-general, since 1837. See Public Health.

BI-METALLISM, the system of having two standard metallic currencies in a country, gold and silver, much advocated by MM. H. Cernuschi and E. Laveleye, and others since 1867. By 56 Geo. III. c. 63 (1812), it was enacted that "gold coins only should be legal tender in all payments of more than 40s." in this country; the tender of silver being previously unlimited. A bi-metallic currency was established in France in 1803. It was recommended for Germany in 1879, and was discussed at the Monetary Conference at Paris, April, 1881. The unrestricted coinage of silver was suspended in the countries termed the Latin Union in 1873. See F. A. Walker's "International Bi-metallism," 1896; sir R. Giffen's "Case against Bi-metallism," 1892; and major L. Darwin's "Bi-metallism," 1898.

BIRTHS. The births of children were taxed in England, viz.: birth of a duke, 30*l.*; of a common person, 2*s.*, 7 Will. III. 1695. Taxed again, 1783. The instances of four children at a birth are numerous; but it is recorded that a woman of Königsberg (3 Sept. 1784), and the wife of one Nelson, a tailor, of Oxford-market, London (Oct. 1800), had five children at a birth. The king usually presents 3*l.* 3*s.* to a woman giving birth to three or more living children at one time. See Bills of Mortality and Registers.

BISHOP (Greek episcopos, overseer), a name given by the Athenians to those who had the inspection of the city. The Jews and Romans had also like officers. St. Peter, styled the first bishop of Rome, was martyred 65. The presbyter was the same as a bishop. Jerome. The episcopate became an object of contention about 144. The title of pope was anciently assumed by all bishops, and was exclusively claimed by Gregory VII. (1073-85).

By this statute, of the four archbishoprics of Armagh, Dublin, Tuam, and Cashel, the last two were to be absorbed on the decrease of the then archbishops, which has since occurred; and it was enacted that eight of the then eighteen bishoprics should, as they became void, be henceforth united to other sees, which was accomplished in 1850; so that the Irish church at present consists of two archbishops and ten bishops.]

BISHOPS IN SCOTLAND were probably nominated in the fourth century.

The Reformers, styling themselves "The Congregation of the Lord," having taken up arms and defeated the queen-mother, Mary of Guise, called a parliament, which set up a new form of church polity on the Genevese model, in which bishops were replaced by "superintendents" 1561

Episcopacy restored by the regent Morton (see Tul- 1572

Three prelates for Scottish sees consecrated at Lambeth (John Spotswood, Gavin Hamilton, and Andrew Lamb) for Glasgow, Galloway, and Brechin 21 Oct. 1581

Episcopacy abolished, the bishops in a body deposed, and four excommunicated, by a parliament, elected by the people (covenanters), which met at Glasgow Dec. 1638

Episcopacy restored; an archbishop (James Sharp) and three bishops consecrated by Sheldon, bishop of London 15 Dec. 1661
The Scottish convention expelled the bishops; abolished episcopacy; declared the throne vacant; chose up a claim of right; and proclaimed William and Mary 11 April, 1689
Episcopacy formally abolished, and the bishops' revenues sequestered 19 Sept. "
The Episcopal church was thus reduced to the condition of a Nonconformist body, at first barely tolerated. It opened its first congress, 10 May, 1874
Bishop Rose connected the established episcopal church of Scotland with that form of it which is now merely tolerated, he having been bishop of Edinburgh from 1687 till 1720, when, on his death, Dr. Fullarton became the first post-revolution bishop of that see. Fife (now St. Andrews, so called in 1844) now unites the bishopric of Dunkeld (re-instituted in 1727) and that of Dunblane (re-instituted in 1731). Ross (of uncertain date) was united to Moray (re-instituted in 1727) in 1838. Argyll and the Isles never existed independently until 1847, having been conjoined to Moray and Ross, or to Ross alone, previously to that year. Galloway has been added to the see of Glasgow.

BISHOPS, AMERICAN. The first was Samuel Seabury, consecrated bishop of Connecticut by four nonjuring prelates, at Aberdeen, in Scotland, 14 Nov. 1784. The bishops of New York and Pennsylvania were consecrated in London, by the archbishop of Canterbury, 4 Feb. 1787, and the bishop of Virginia in 1790. Several American bishops formed part of the Pan-Anglican synod, at Lambeth, 24-27 Sept. 1867. The first R. C. bishop of the United States was Dr. Carroll, of Maryland, in 1780.

* Between 1847-59, Miss (now baroness) Burdett Coutts gave 60,000. to endow colonial bishoprics. In 1866 she petitioned parliament, on account of some of the bishops professing independence of the church of England. Since then, colonial bishops have been appointed without intervention of the civil power. Much discussion took place in 1867, through the deposition of Dr. Colenso, bishop of Natal, by his metropolitan, Dr. Gray, bishop of Capetown, and the attempts of the latter to consecrate a new bishop, in opposition to the law; see under Africa, and Church of England.

BISHOP'S RING, the name given to the halo or corona extending from  $20^{\circ}$  to  $30^{\circ}$  from the sun, caused by the diffraction of solar light through the minute particles of volcanic dust suspended in the air after the great volcanic eruption at Krakatoa, in Java, 26 Aug., 1883. The phenomenon was first observed by Mr. Bishop at Honolulu, 5 Sept., 1883, hence the name.

BISHOPS, SUFFRAGAN, to assist metropolitans, existed in the early church. Twenty-six, appointed by Henry VIII. 1534, were abolished by Mary, 1553, and restored by Elizabeth, 1558. The last appointed is said to have been Sterne, bishop of Colchester, 1606. The appointment of suffragans bishops was revived in 1869, and archdeacon Henry Mackenzie, suffragan bishop of Nottingham (diocese of Lincoln), was consecrated 2 Feb. 1870, and archdeacon Edward Parry, suffragan bishop of Dover (diocese of Canterbury), 23 March, 1870. Others have been appointed since; there were 9 in 1889; 16 in 1892; 28 suffragans in 1905; 29 suffragan and 5 assistant bishops in 1906; 30 suffragans in 1907; 30 in 1909. See Suffragan.

BISLEY, see Volunteers.

BISMUTH was recognised as a distinct metal by Agricola, in 1530. It is very fusible and brittle, and of a yellowish white colour.

BISSEXTILE, see Calendar and Leap Year.

BITHYNIA, an ancient province in Asia Minor, is said to have been invaded by Thracian tribes, some named Bithyni, who gave it the name of Bithynia. It was subject successively to the Assyrians, Lydians, Persians, and Macedonians. Most of the cities were rebuilt by Grecian colonists.

BITONTO (Naples). Here Montemar and the Spaniards defeated the Germans, 27 May, 1734, and thereby acquired the kingdom of the Two Sicilies for Don Carlos.

BLACK ACT, 9 Geo. I. c. 22 (1722), was passed to punish armed persons termed blacks, going about in disguise with their faces blacked, robbing warrens and fish-ponds, cutting down plantations, killing deer, &c. By this act, sending anonymous letters demanding money, &c., was made felony.

BLACK AND WHITE, a weekly illustrated paper, first published 6 Feb. 1891, price 6d.

BLACK ART, see Alchemy, Witchcraft.

BLACK ASSIZE, see under Oxford.

BLACK BOOK (Liber Niger), a book kept in the exchequer, which received the orders of that court. It was published by Hearne in 1728.

A book doubtfully said to have been kept in monasteries, wherein details of the enormities practised in religious houses were entered for the inspection of visitors, under Hen. VIII. 1535. The name was given to the list of pensioners, printed 1831; and to other books. See Italy, 1876. The title Black Book was given to a list of Habitual Criminals, 1869-76; published by lieutenant-col. Du Cane of Brixton, March, 1877.

BLACKBURN, Lancashire, so called in Domesday-book. The manufacture of a cloth called Blackburn check, carried on in 1650, was superseded by Blackburn greys. In 1767, James Hargreaves, of this town, invented the spinning-jenny, for which he was eventually expelled from the county. About 1810 or 1812 the townspeople availed themselves of his discoveries, and engaged largely in the cotton manufacture. The Blackburn mills are equipped with, approximately, 80,000 looms and 1,240,000 spindles. For a long period the town has ranked as the greatest weaving centre in the world. His late majesty, king Edward VII., laid the foundation stone of a technical school on May 9, 1888, and thus inaugurated a large scheme of town improvement, a great clearance of slum property being made for the purpose. Since then the clearance has been continued by stages, and early in 1910, on another portion of the site, the corporation commenced the erection of a sessions house and extensive school premises. Blackburn murder, see Trials, July, 1876. See Riots, 1878. Population, 1909, 136,959.

BLACK FLAG, customary to hoist one after
Buccaners, Piracy, and Tompkin, 1883.

BLACK FRIARS, see Dominicans.

BLACKFRIARS BRIDGE, London. The first stone of the late bridge was laid 31 Oct. 1760, and it was completed by Mylne, in 1769. It was frequently repaired, 1834-50, and began to sink. In 1864 it was pulled down, and a temporary bridge erected. The foundation of a new five-arched bridge, designed by Mr. Joseph Cubitt, was laid by lord mayor Hale, 20 July, 1865, and the bridge was opened by queen Victoria 6 Nov. 1869. The first railway train (London, Chatham, and Dover) entered the city of London over the new railway bridge, Blackfriars, 6 Oct. 1864. Another railway bridge opened 7 Jan. 1884.

Fatal accident during operations for widening the bridge: 5 men killed, 28 Nov. 1907; the bridge widened, and new portion opened by the lord mayor, who drove the first tram across on 14 Sept. 1909.

BLACK FRIDAY, 11 May, 1866, the height of the commercial panic in London, through the stoppage of Overend, Gurney & Co. (limited), on 10 May. Messrs. John Henry and Edmund Gurney, and their partners, committed for trial for conspiracy to defraud, 21 Jan. 1869, were tried and acquitted, 13-23 Dec. 1869. On Friday, 21 Nov. 1890, a temporary panic was produced by the embarrassments of Messrs. Baring Brothers.

BLACK HAND, the terror of the Italian colonies in New York. This was not a secret society like the "Mafia" and "Camorra," but a collection of individual blackmailers, working in groups, and using the sign of a black hand. In 1907, 21 "Black Hand" outrages were recorded—tenements destroyed by bombs, and men found mysteriously shot, or stabbed with numerous stiletto wounds. Twenty-three similar crimes are recorded for 1908. Lieut. Petrosino, of the New York detective force, who had gone to Italy to prosecute enquiries regarding the society, was murdered at Palermo in Sicily, 12 March, 1909. See Spain, 1883.

BLACKHEATH, Kent, near London. Here
 Wat Tyler and his followers assembled 12 June,

1381; and here also Jack Cade and his 20,000
 Kentish men encamped, 1 June, 1450; see Tyler and Cade. Here the Cornish rebels were defeated and Flammock's insurrection quelled, 22 June, 1497. The ancient cavern, on the ascent to Blackheath, popularly termed "the retreat of Cade," and of banditti in the time of Cromwell, was re-discovered in 1780. Several daring highway robberies were committed near the heath, and the youthful culprits punished, in 1877. See Trials. Murder of Mrs. Arabella C. Tyler at Kidbrook-park-road, 14 Aug. 1898.

BLACKLEGS. A name commonly given to cheating gamblers, was unjustly given to non-unionist workmen by the unionists and others during the labour agitation in 1889 and 1890.

BLACK LETTER, employed in the first printed books in the middle of the 15th century.
 The first printing types were Gothic; but they were modified into the present Roman type about 1469: Pliny's Natural History was then printed in the new characters.

BLACK LIST, name given to printed lists of insolvents, bankrupts, and other matters affecting the credit of firms and individuals, published in London, weekly or bi-weekly, drawn from public registers. The legality of issuing information of this kind has been questioned, but, in the case of the Scottish Mercantile Society's Record in 1848, the house of lords found "such publication" was not slanderous. Private lists of a searching kind issued to subscribers were first started by Mr.
 Thos. Perry of Cornhill. Similar systems widely used in America and elsewhere. "Black list" in regard to drunkards came into operation under the Licensing Act of 1902.

BLACK-MAIL, a compulsory payment for protection of cattle, &c., made in the border counties was prohibited by Elizabeth in 1601. It was exacted in Scotland from the lowlanders by the highlanders, till 1745. It checked agricultural improvement. The term black-mail has been applied to the payments of new commercial companies for notices respecting them in certain newspapers, 1889-90.

Five men convicted and sentenced for black-mailing (Andrew Grant and Herbert Coulton—penal servitude for life) . . . July 5, 1897 to several years penal servitude for blackmailing women . . . 20 Dec. 1898

 to 9 months imprisonment . . . 15 April, 1899
 Franz von Veltheim, on a charge of demanding large sums of money with menaces from Mr.
 S. B. Joel, was found guilty and sentenced to 20 years' penal servitude. See Trials . . . 12 Feb. 1908 Robert Standish Sievier, charged with attempting to obtain by menaces the sum of 5,000l. from Jack Burnato Joel, was found not guilty. See
Trials . . . 20 July, "

BLACK MONDAY, Easter Monday, 14 April, 1360, "so full dark of mist and hail, and so bitter cold that many men died on their horsebacks with the cold." Stow. The day on which a number of the English were slaughtered at a village near Dublin, in 1209. The day of panic when the Scottish rebels in 1745 were reported to have arrived at Derby, and the Bank of England paid in sixpences.

BLACK MONEY, base foreign coin so termed,
 1335.

BLACK MUSEUM, Scotland Yard, a collection of relics connected with crime, begun in 1874.

BLACKPOOL, Lancashire, a watering place. The foundation-stone of an Eiffel Tower was laid here 25 Sep. 1891. Claremont esplanade cost 150,000*l.*; completed during 1900. New promenade and sea wall, constructed at a cost of 400,000*l.*, opened by the mayor 25 July, 1905. Population in 1851, 1664; 1901, 48,000; 1910 (est.), 56,000.

BLACK PRINCE, EDWARD, eldest son of king Edward III., born 15 June, 1330; victor at Poitiers, 19 Sept. 1356; at Najara, 3 April, 1367; died 8 June, 1376.

BLACK REPUBLIC, see Hayti.

BLACK ROD has a gold lion at the top, and is carried by the usher of the order of the knights of the garter (instituted 1349), instead of the mace. He also keeps the door when a chapter of the order is sitting, and during the sessions of parliament attends the house of lords and acts as their messenger to the commons. Gen. sir M. Biddulph, G.C.B., died 23 July (aged 80), 1904; succeeded by adm. sir H. F. Stephenson, G.C.V.O., K.C.B., 19 Aug. 1904.

BLACK SEA, THE EUXINE (Pontus Euxinus of the ancients), a large internal sea between the S. W. provinces of Russia and Asia Minor, connected with the sea of Azoff by the straits of Yenikalé, and with the sea of Marmora by the channel of Constantinople.

This sea was much frequented by the Greeks and Italians, till closed to all nations by the Turks after the fall of Constantinople in 1453.

The Russians obtained admission by the treaty of Kainardji 10 July, 1774

It was partially opened to British and other traders (since which time the Russians gradually obtained the preponderance). 1779

Entered by the British and French fleets, at the requisition of the Porte, after the destruction of the Turkish fleet at Sinope by the Russians, 30 Nov. 1853. 3 Jan. 1854

A dreadful storm in this sea raged, and caused great loss of life and shipping, and valuable stores for the allied armies. See Russo-Turkish War.

13 to 16 Nov. " The Black Sea was opened to the commerce of all nations by the treaty of 1856.

The article of the treaty of Paris, 30 March, 1856, by which the sea was opened to the commerce of all nations, and interdicted to any ships of war; and the erection of military maritime arsenals forbidden, was repudiated by a Russian circular, dated . . . 31 (19) Oct. 1870

After some correspondence, the meeting of a conference on the subject, in London, was agreed to by all the powers concerned in the treaty. "

The conference met in London 17 Jan. 1871, and a treaty was signed by which the neutralization of the sea was abrogated; but it was agreed by a special protocol, that no nation shall liberate itself from the obligations of a treaty without the consent of the others who signed it. 13 March, 1871

Blockade of the Black Sea declared by Turkey during the war about 3 May, 1877

Revival of the Black Sea fleet: Tchesma, ironclad, launched by the Czar at Sebastopol (others to follow). . . 18 May, 1886

The Black Sea territory reorganized as a Russian province by decree; announced. . . 4 Aug. 1896

BLACKS, or Neri; see Bianchi.

BLACKWALL (London), the site of fine commercial docks and warehouses. See Docks. The Blackwall railway was opened to the public, 4 July, 1840; the eastern terminus being at Blackwall wharf, and the western in Fenchurch street. See Tunnels, 1891, et seq. and Navy, June, 1898.

BLACK WATCH, armed companies of the loyal clans (Campbells, Monros, &c.) employed to watch the highlands from about 1725 to 1739, when they were formed into the celebrated 42nd regiment, enrolled as "The Royal Highland Black Watch." Their removal for foreign service probably facilitated the outbreak in 1745. They wore dark tartans, and hence were called Black Watch. They have served with distinction in many campaigns.

BLACKWATER, BATTLE OF, in Ireland, 14 Aug. 1598, when the Irish chief O'Neil defeated the English under sir Henry Bagnall. Pope Clement VIII. sent O'Neil a consecrated plume, and granted to his followers the same indulgence as to crusaders.

BLACKWOOD'S EDINBURGH MAGAZINE, established 1817.

BLADENSBURG, see Washington, 1814.

BLANC, see Mont Blanc.

BLAND ACT, see United States, Feb. 1878.

BLANDFORD'S ACT, 19 & 20 Vict. c. 104, for augmentation of benefices, &c. passed, 1856.

BLANK VERSE, see Verse.

BLANKETEERS. A number of operatives who, on 10 March, 1817, met in St. Peter's field, near Manchester, many of them having blankets, rugs, or great coats rolled up and fastened to their backs. This was termed the Blanket meeting. They proceeded to march towards London, but were dispersed by the magistracy. It is stated that their object was to commence a general insurrection. See Derby. Eventually the ringleaders had an interview with the cabinet ministers, and a better understanding between the working classes and the government ensued.

BLANKET SCANDAL, see under South African War.

BLANKETS are said to have been first made at Bristol by Thos. Blanket, in the 14th century. This is doubtful.

BLASPHEMY was punished with death by the law of Moses (Lev. xxiv.) 1491 B.C.; and by the code of Justinian, A. D. 529. It is punishable by the civil and canon law of England, regulated by 60 Geo. III. c. 8 (1819). Daniel Isaac Eaton was tried and convicted in London of blasphemy, 6 March, 1812. Robert Taylor, a protestant clergyman, was tried twice for the same crime. He was sentenced to two years' imprisonment, and largely fined, July, 1831. In Dec. 1840, two publishers of blasphemous writings were convicted.

BLASTING GELATINE (a mixture of nitro-glycerine and gun-cotton), a violent explosive prepared by Alfred Nobel, and modified by professor Abel, 1879. See Nobel Bequest.

BLAZONRY. Bearing coats-of-arms was introduced and became hereditary in France and England about 1192, owing to the knights painting their banners with different figures, thereby to distinguish them in the crusades. Dugdale. See Heraldry.

BLEACHING was known in Egypt, Syria, India, and Gaul. Pliny. An improved chemical system was adopted by the Dutch, who introduced it into England and Scotland in 1768. There were large bleach-fields in Lancashire, Fife, Forfar, and Renfrew, and in the vale of the Leven, in Dumbar-ton. The application of the gas chlorine to bleaching is due to Berthollet's discovery, about 1785. Its combination with lime (as chloride of lime) was devised by Mr. Tennant, of Glasgow, who took out a patent for the process in 1798, and by his firm it is still extensively manufactured. In 1822 Dr. Ure published an elaborate series of experiments on this substance. A new and more rapid process invented by Mr. Jacob Baynes Thompson, tried at Bolton, and reported successful, April, 1884. Improvements made by Mr. William Mather, 1885. The manufacture of bleaching powder was cheapened by Mond's process, in which the wasted chlorine is utilized, by Messrs. Brunner, Mond & Co., reported, Oct. 1892. In 1860 bleaching and dyeing works were placed under the regulations of the Factories Act.

BLenheim (or Plintheim) a village in Bavaria on the left bank of the Danube, near the town of Heilstett, the site of a battle fought 2 Aug. (new style, 13), 1704, between the English and confederates, commanded by the duke of Marlborough, and the French and Bavarians, under marshal Tallard and the elector of Bavaria. The latter were defeated with the loss of about 12,000 killed, and 13,000 prisoners (including Tallard). Bavaria became the prize of the conquerors. The British parliament gave Marlborough the honour of Woodstock and hundred of Wotton, and erected for him the house of Blenheim.*

BLIND. The first public school for the blind was established by Valentine Haüy, at Paris in 1784. The first in England was at Liverpool, in 1791; in Scotland, at Edinburgh, in 1792; and the first in London in 1799. Printing in raised or embossed characters for the use of the blind was begun at Paris by Haüy in 1786. The whole Bible was printed at Glasgow in raised Roman characters about 1848. Louis Braille, born near Paris, Jan. 1809, died 1852, became blind from an accident at the age of three. He adapted from M. Barbier's system his own simple and beautiful one of dots, for reading and writing, now bearing his name, which he published in 1829 and fully developed in 1834. The Braille musical notation is also much used. A sixpenny magazine for the blind, edited by the late rev. W. Taylor, F.R.S., so eminent for his forty years' exertions on behalf of these sufferers, was published in 1855-6. He aided the establishment of a college for the blind of the upper classes at Worcester, in 1866. There is hardly any department of human knowledge in which blind persons have not obtained distinction.† Laura Bridgman, born in 1829, became dumb and blind two years after. She was so well taught by Dr. Howe, of Boston, U.S., as to become an able instructor of blind and dumb persons; she died 24 May, 1889. By the census of 1851, there were in Great Britain, 21,487 blind persons; 11,273 males, 10,214 females; about one in 975 blind. The number of the blind in Great Britain has proportionally decreased since 1851, according to the census, 22,800 in 1881. In 1881 about one in 1138 blind. Royal Normal College and Academy of Music for the Blind, established 1873, at Norwood, Surrey, mainly by the exertions of Mr. Francis Joseph Campbell, an American, himself blind, and an able teacher, aided by the marquis, aft. duke, of Westminster, purchased for 22,000*l.* by the London school board for the education of the blind, Jan. 1896. Mr. Campbell ascended Mont Blanc in 1880. There were 8 societies for the blind in London in 1910.

Royal Commission on the condition of the blind; extended to the deaf and dumb, Jan. 1886.

According to the census of 1881, the number of blind in the United Kingdom was about 34,000, England and Wales 22,800, Scotland 3,157, Ireland 6,111; 1903, estimated at 33,000 in the United Kingdom. The royal commission to enquire into their condition was appointed 28 July, 1885, and on the 20th Jan. 1886, additional members were appointed, and its inquiries were extended to the deaf, dumb, and imbecile in the United Kingdom, Paris, Germany, Switzerland, and Italy. The commission, after 116 sittings, and many visitations and examinations of witnesses, issued their first report July, 1889. The number of the deaf under instruction in the United Kingdom was in 1851 4,300; in 1910 there were about 20,000 deaf and dumb persons in the United Kingdom, 50 public institutions for children's education and 72 for adults.

The Weekly Summary, a newspaper for the blind, published in London on Wednesdays, started in June, 1892. The Daily Mail edition in "Braille" first published Dec. 1, 1906.

BLINDING by consuming the eyeballs with lime or scalding vinegar, was a punishment inflicted anciently on adulterers, perjurers, and thieves. In the middle ages the penalty was frequently changed from total blindness to a diminution of sight. A whole army of Bulgarians was deprived of sight by the emperor Basil, 104. Several of the eastern emperors had their eyes torn from their heads.

BLISTERS, used by Hippocrates (460-357 B.C.), made, it is said, of cantharides (which see).

BLIZZARD, an old term applied in the Midland counties to the snow-blast, also signifying anything blazing, blinding, or stifling. Of late years violent snow-storms have been termed blizzard in the United States of North America, as well as in Britain. See Storms, 11-13 Jan.; and 11-13 March, 1888, and since.

BLOCKADE is the closing an enemy's ports to all commerce; a practice introduced by the Dutch about 1584. The principle recognized by the European powers is that every blockade, in order to be binding, must be effective. Cadiz blockaded 1797-9; the Elbe was blockaded by Great Britain, 1803; the Baltic, by Denmark, 1848-49 and 1864; the gulf of Finland by the Allies, 1854; and the ports of the Southern States of North America by president Lincoln, April 19, 1861. See Orders in Council, and Berlin.

BLOCK BOOKS, see Printing.

BLOCKS employed in the rigging of ships were much improved in their construction by Walter Taylor, about 1781. In 1801, Mark I. Brunel in-† James Henson, the "blind traveller" (born 1797, died 1864), visited almost every place of note in the world. His travels were published in 1862. In April, 1864, a blind emigrant, Rev. J. Sparrow, was elected chaplain to the Mercers' Company, London, and paid the service, &c., from 1864 to 1885.

Viscount Cairnes (John) was the author of many interesting historical essays. He died in June, 1860, on 13 July, 1860, Henry Farnest, the blind professional political economy at Cambridge, was elected M.P. for Brighton. See Members, 1860 and 1861, and was appointed 18th November general, April, 1861, Lord's New, near Mass Allen King, blind at 7 years of age, invent 7 bar-gauges by ear, novelist, benefactor to the poor, died aged 55, early May, 1894.

vented a mode of making blocks by machinery, which was put into operation in 1808, and in 1815 was said to have saved the country 20,000*l.* a year.

BLOEMFONTEIN, the capital of the Orange River Colony, on the river Modder healthily situated, 4,518 feet above the sea level on an extensive plateau, 749 miles by rail N.E. of Cape Town, 200 miles W. by N. of Durban; line from Cape Colony to Bloemfontein opened 17 December, 1900, and since then the rail connecting it with Johannesburg and Natal. Capital of the Orange Free State, formally annexed to the British Empire, 28 May, 1900. Bloemfontein contains the council chamber of the former republican government, a museum, and other public buildings. A new system of water supply estimated to cost 110,000*l.*, drainage costing 70,000*l.*, and a bridge over the Bloem spruit are in course of construction (1905). It is the seat of an Anglican bishopric, of various colleges, and a considerable trade in wool is carried on. Pop. 1904, 15,501 whites, and 18,328 natives.

BLOIS, France, the Roman Blesum. The count Guy II. sold it with his domains to Louis duke of Orleans in 1391, and eventually it accrued to the crown. The states-general were held here 1576 and 1588, on account of the religious wars; and here Henry duke of Guise was assassinated by order of the king, Henry III., 23 Dec. 1588. The empress Maria Louisa retired here in 1814.

BLOOD. The circulation of the blood through the lungs was known to Michael Servetus, a Spanish physician, in 1553. Cæsalpinus published an account of the general circulation, of which he had some confused ideas, improved afterwards by experiments, 1569. Paul of Venice, or Father Paolo (real name Peter Sarpi), discovered the valves which serve for the circulation; but the honour of the positive discovery of the circulation belongs to William Harvey, between 1619 and 1628. Freind. A memorial window in the church at Folkestone, his birthplace, was uncovered 9 April, 1874, and a statue at the same place, 6 Aug. 1881.

EATING BLOOD was prohibited to Noah, Gen. ix., to the Jews, Lev. xvi., &c., and to the Gentile converts by the apostles at an assembly at Jerusalem, A. D. 52, Acts xv.

BLOOD-DRINKING was anciently tried to give vigour to the system. Louis XI. in his last illness, drank the warm blood of infants, in the vain hope of restoring his decayed strength, 1483. Hemmett.

In the 15th century an opinion prevailed that the declining vigour of the aged might be repaired by TRANSFUSING into their veins the blood of young persons. It was contemplated in France by the physicians about 1665, and prevailed for many years, till the most fatal effects having ensued, it was suppressed by an edict. "An English physician (Gower, or Lower) practised in this way, he died in 1691. Freind. It was attempted again in France in 1797, and more recently there, in a few cases, with success; and in England (but the instances are rare) since 1823. Tried at Philadelphia, U.S., April, 1877; in London, unsuccessful, 10 May, 1877.

BLOOD'S CONSPIRACY. Blood, a discarded officer of Oliver Cromwell's household, with his confederates, seized the duke of Ormond in his coach, intending to hang him, and had got him to Tyburn, when he was rescued by his friends, 6 Dec. 1670. Blood afterwards, in the disguise of a clergyman, attempted to steal the regal crown from the Jewel-office in the Tower, 9 May, 1671; yet, notwithstanding these and other offences, he was not only pardoned, but had a pension of 500*l.* per annum settled on him by Charles II. 1671. He died 24 Aug. 1680.

"BLOODY ASSIZES," held by Jeffreys in the west of England, in Aug. 1685, after the defeat of the duke of Monmouth in the battle of Sedgemoor. Upwards of 300 persons were executed after short trials; very many were whipped, imprisoned, and fined; and nearly 1000 were sent as slaves to the American plantations.

BLOOMSBURY GANG, a cant term applied to an influential political party in the reign of George III., who met at Bloomsbury House, the residence of the duke of Bedford. The marquis of Stafford, the last survivor, died 26 Oct. 1803.

BLOREHEATH (Staffordshire), where, 23 Sept. 1459, the earl of Salisbury and the Yorkists defeated the Lancastrians, whose leader, lord Audley, was slain with many Cheshire gentlemen. A cross commemorates this conflict.

BLOWING-MACHINES, the large cylinders, used in blowing machines, were erected by Mr. Smeaton at the Carron iron works, 1760. One equal to the supply of air for forty forge fires was erected at the king's dockyard, Woolwich. The hot-air blast, a most important improvement, causing great economy of fuel, was invented by Mr. James B. Neilson, of Glasgow, and patented in 1828. He died 18 Jan. 1865.

BLOW-PIPE. An Egyptian using one is among the paintings on the tombs at Thebes. It was employed in mineralogy, by Antony Von Swab, a Swede, about 1733, and improved by Wollaston and others. In 1802, professor Robert Hare, of Philadelphia, increased the action of the blow-pipe by the application of oxygen and hydrogen. By the agency of Newman's improved blow-pipes, in 1816, Dr. E. D. Clarke fused the earths, alkalies, metals, &c. Works on the blow-pipe by Plattner and Muspratt, 1854; G. Plympton, 1874, and W. A. Ross, 1880-8.

BLUE was the favourite colour of the Scotch covenanters in the 17th century. Blue and orange or yellow, became the whig colours after the revolution in 1688; and were adopted on the cover of the whig periodical, the "Edinburgh Review," first published in 1802. The Prussian blue dye was discovered by Diesbach, at Berlin, in 1710. Fine blues are now obtained from coal-tar; see Aniline. BLUE-COAT SCHOOLS, so called in reference to the costume of the children. The Blue-coat school, formerly in Newgate-street, London, was instituted by Edward VI. in 1553; see Christ's Hospital. BLUE-STOCKING, a term applied to literary ladies, was originally conferred on a society comprising both sexes (1760, ad seq.). Benjamin Stillingfleet, the naturalist, an active member, wore blue worsted stockings; hence the name. The beautiful Mrs. Jerningham is said to have worn blue stockings at the conversaciones of Mrs. Montague. Blue Ribbon Army, see Temperance, 1882.

BLUE-BOOKS, reports and other papers printed by order of parliament, are so named on account of their wrappers; many hundreds are published annually.

BLUMENAU, Lower Austria; on 22 July, 1866, the Austrians in possession of this place were attacked by the Prussians on their march towards Vienna, a severe conflict was interrupted by the news of the armistice agreed to at Nikolsburg; and the same evening Austrians and Prussians bivouacked together.

BOARD OF ADMIRALTY, AGRICULTURE AND FISHERIES CONTROL, GREEN-CLOTH, HEALTH, TRADE, EDUCATION, &c., see under Admiralty, &c.

BOATS. Flat-bottomed boats brought into use by Barker, a Dutchman, about 1690; see Life-Boat. A mode of building boats by the help of the steam-engine was invented by Mr. Nathan Thompson of New York in 1860, and premises were erected for its application at Bow, near London, in 1861. Charles Clifford's valuable Boat-lowering apparatus was invented 1856. See Canal-Boats and Life-Boats.

Submarine boats, one is said to have been invented about 1578; and one tried in the Thames early in the seventeenth century, and one at Plymouth in 1774. Robert Fulton's experiments in this direction were not accepted (early nineteenth century). Unsuccessful attempts made by several European powers in 1851, and since. Nordenfelt's submarine boat first constructed at Stockholm in 1883, to be employed in naval warfare, exhibited at Landskrona in presence of officers sent by all the great powers 23 Sept. 1885; the boat, made of steel, 64 feet long; motive power, steam; crew of 3 or 4 men, breathe for six hours by means of sealed up compressed air; the boat may be raised or sunk at the will of the crews and by means of torpedoes may cause the destruction of any vessel. BOCCACCIO'S DECAMERONE, a collection of a hundred stories or novels (many very immoral), severely satirising the clergy, reigned to have been related in ten days, during the plague of Florence in 1348. Boccaccio lived 1313-75. A copy of the first edition (that of Valdarfer, in 1471) was knocked down at the duke of Roxburgh's sale, to the Duke of Marlborough, for 2260*l.*, 17 June, 1812. This copy was afterwards sold by public auction, for 875 guineas, 5 June, 1819.

BODLEIAN LIBRARY, Oxford, founded in 1598, and opened in 1602, by sir Thos. Bodley (died, 28 Jan. 1612). It is open to the public, and claims a copy of all works published in this country. In 1868, it contained about 250,000 volumes; in 1885, 432,417 volumes (MSS. 20,598.) For rare works and MSS. it is said to be second only to the Vatican. Mr Macray's "Annals of the Bodleian Library," 1868. Tercentenary celebrated 8-9 Oct. 1902.

BEOTIA, a division of Greece, north of Attica, known previously as Aonia, Messopia, Hyantis, Ogygia, and Cadmeis. Thebes, the capital, was celebrated for the exploits and misfortunes of its kings and heroes. The term Beotian was used by the Athenians as a synonym for dullness; but unjustly,—since Pindar, Hesiod, Plutarch, Democritus, Epaminondas, and Corinna, were Beotians. The early history and dates are mythical; see Thebes.

BOERS (peasants), a name given to the Dutch settlers in South Africa, since the 16th century, who still retain their national character. Discontented with the British rule in the Cape since 1814, large bands of them in 1835-7 trekked or emigrated northwards, and founded the Orange Free State (1836) and the Transvaal Republic (1848), after much fighting with the natives. See Transvaal and South African War.

BOG OF ALLEN, the name given to an extensive series of bogs in Ireland, on the E. side of the Shannon.

BOGOTÀ, SANTA FÉ DE, capital of New Grenada (which see), founded 1538.

BOGS, probably the remains of forests, covered with peat and loose soil. An act for the drainage of Irish bogs, passed March, 1830. The bog-land of Ireland has been estimated at 3,000,000 acres; that of Scotland at upwards of 2,000,000; and that of England at near 1,000,000 of acres. In Jan. 1849, Mr. Rees Reece took out a patent for certain valuable products from Irish peat. Candles and various other articles produced from peat have been since sold in London. Fuel for railway engines and other purposes was made from peat (April, 1873); and a peat, coal, and charcoal company established.

A considerable trade is carried on in Dublin in bog-oak jewelry and ornaments, originated on the occasion of the visit of Geo. IV. to Ireland, 1811.

Much destruction has been caused by the motion of bogs. Leland (about 1540) speaks of Chat Moss being so.

Much of the bog-land of Enghmore, Ireland, 3 Jan. 1852; and farm houses and fields near Dunmore were covered, Oct. 1873. Through heavy rains and the percolation of water, the Knockmanna bog, a mile long and a ½ mile broad at Rathmore in E. Kerry gave way, and swept everything in its course for about 2 miles; the Donnelly family (8 persons) at Quarry-lodge, on lord Kenmare's estate, submerged; salmon fishery in the river Fook, near Sligo, destroyed, 20, 21 Dec. 1867; bog slip near Liscaunor, West Clare, much damage and livestock lost, 11, 12 Nov. 1891.

BOGUE FORTS, see China, 1841.

BOHEMIA, formerly the Hercynian forest (Bohemum, Teutonic), derives its name from the Bili, a Celtic tribe. It was governed by dukes (Borziroi the first, 891), till Ottocar assumed the title of king, 1198. The kings at first held their territory from the empire; and the crown was elective till it came to the house of Austria, in which it is now hereditary. Prague, the capital, is famous for sieges and battles. Population in 1857, 4,705,525; 1900, 6,318,697; 1910 (est.), 7,400,000; see Prague. For Bohemians, see Gypsies.

Dupin says "They rejected the sacraments of the church, were governed by simple laics, and held the scriptures for their only rule of faith. They presented a confession of faith to king Ladislas in 1504 to justify themselves from errors laid to their charge." Luther, in 1533, testifies to their purity of doctrine, and Melancthon commends their discipline. They were dispersed during the religious wars of Germany in the 17th century.

BONES. The art of softening bones was discovered about 1688, and they were used in the cutlery manufacture, &c., immediately afterwards. The declared value of the bones of cattle and of other animals, and of fish (exclusive of whale-fins) imported into the United Kingdom from Russia, Prussia, Holland, Denmark, &c., amounted to 363,613*l.* in 1851, to 659,416*l.* in 1871, to 741,899*l.* in 1877, to 617,748*l.* in 1883, to 313,765*l.* in 1887, to 449,526*l.* in 1890. Bone-dust has been extensively employed in manure since the publication of Liebig's researches in 1840.

BONE-SETTING cannot be said to have been practised scientifically until 1620. Bell.

The ignorant "bonesetters" often did good and often harm; the principle upon which they acted is now adopted by surgeons; and is set forth in Dr. Wharton Hoole's work on "The Setting and Treatment of Joints," 1871. Show very satisfactory results with footballers, 1900-1910.

BON MARCHÉ (cheap). Name given by some shopkeepers in London to their mode of selling goods to the poor at very small profits; now applied to great establishments in London, Paris, and many large provincial towns. The system was originated at Paris by M<sup>me</sup>. Boucicault, originally a shop-girl; about 1842, she, with her husband, opened a shop in the time of deep distress for meeting the wants of the poorest people. In time her business greatly increased with enlarged premises, and she adopted the system of the division of profits with her employed. She realised a large fortune, and became a munificent benefactress of the city. She died in Dec. 1887, worth it is said four million pounds sterling. M. Crespin de Vidouville, a similar eccentric character, died at Paris 20 Feb. 1888.

BONN, a town on the Rhine (the Roman Bonna), was in the electorate of Cologne. It has been frequently besieged, and was assigned to Prussia in 1814. The academy founded by the elector in 1777, made a university 1784; abolished by Napoleon; re-established and enlarged, 1818. Here Albert, our late prince consort, was entered as a student, May, 1837. Population 1905, 81,996.

Three days festival in memory of Robert Schumann, who died at Bonn, 59 years ago, were begun, 21 May, 1906.

BONNY RIVER, Guinea, West Africa; a seat of the palm oil trade; king George visited England in 1878. A sanguinary battle was fought between the king Oko Jumbo and the people of New Calabar, who were defeated, 9 April, 1882. Peace made by British intervention on Aug. 14, 1882.

King Oko Jumbo visited London, summer 1885; left 15 July, 1885; his death reported Aug. 1884.

BONS HOMMES, hermits of simple and gentle lives, appeared in France about 1257; in England about 1283. The prior of the order was called le bon homme by Louis VI.

BOOK (Anglo-Saxon, boc; German, buch). Books were originally made of boards, or the inner bark of trees: afterwards of skins and parchment. Papyrus, an indigenous plant, was adopted in Egypt. Books with leaves of vellum were invented by Attalus, king of Pergamus, about 198 B.C., at which time books were in volumes or rolls. The MSS. in the Vatican consist of papyrus, rolled and charred and matted together by the fire, and are about nine inches long, and one, two, or three inches in diameter, each being a separate treatise. The first PRINTED BOOKS (see Printing) were printed on one side only, the leaves being pasted back to back. See Libraries.

Title-pages to printed books in England were not introduced till shortly before 1490, they were used by Wynkyn de Worde, but not by Caxton, in the 15th century. Mr. A. W. Pollard's "Last words on Title-pages" appeared in 1891. See Printing.

Improved systems were published by Benjamin Booth in 1789, by Edw. Thos. Jones in 1821 and 1831, and many others since.

Borax has lately been found in Saxony. It is now largely manufactured from the boracic acid found in certain lagoons in Tuscany. Very largely used as an antiseptic and in preservation of perishable foods, 1903.

After several changes Bordeaux finally surrendered to Charles VII. of France, 14 Oct. 1453. The fine equestrian statue of Louis XV. was erected in 1743. Bordeaux was entered by the victorious British army after the battle of Orthez, fought 27 Feb. 1814.—13 vessels were burnt and others injured in the port through the ignition and explosion of petroleum spirit, 28 Sept. 1869. BOTANY. Aristotle is considered the founder of the science (about 347 B.C.). Historia Plantarum of Theophrastus was written about 320 B.C. Authors on botany became numerous at the close of the 15th century. Fuchsius, Bock, Bauhin, Cæsalpinus, and others, wrote between 1535 and 1600. The system and arrangement of the great Linnæus (see Linnaean system) was made known about 1735; and Jussieu's system, founded on Tournefort's, and called "the natural system," in 1758. At Linnæus's death, 1778, the species of plants actually described amounted in number to 11,800. The number of species now recorded cannot fall short of 100,000. J. C. Loudon's "Encyclopædia of Plants," a most comprehensive work, first appeared in 1829. De Candolle's "Prodromus Systematis Naturalis Regni Vegetabilis" (of which Vol. I. appeared in 1818), was continued by his son Alphonse, who died, aged 86, April, 1893. An International Botanical congress was opened in London, 23 May, 1866, professor A. De Candolle president; another at Amsterdam, 13 April, 1877. Robert Brown, who accompanied Flinders in his survey of New Holland in 1803, died 10 June, 1858, aged 85, was long acknowledged to be the chief of the botanists of his day.

BOYNE, a river in Ireland, near which William III. defeated his father-in-law, James II., 1 July, 1690. The latter lost 1500 (out of 30,000) men; the Protestant army lost about a third of that number (out of 36,000). James fled to Dublin, thence to Waterford, and escaped to France. The duke of Schomberg was killed by mistake by his own soldiers as he was crossing the river, and here also was killed the rev. George Walker, who defended Londonderry, in 1689. Near Drogheda is a splendid obelisk, 150 feet in height, erected in 1736 by the Protestants of the empire in commemoration of this victory.

BOYNE, man-of-war of 98 guns, destroyed by fire at Portsmouth, 4 May, 1795, by the explosion of the magazine; numbers perished. Portions were recovered June, 1840.

BOYS' BRIGADE. (The) Founded 1883, by sir William A. Smith of Glasgow, with the object of "the advancement of Christ's Kingdom among boys, and the promotion of habits of obedience, reverence, discipline, self-respect, and all that tends towards true Christian manliness." The companies of the brigade are composed of boys of 12 to 17 years of age, formed in connection with the Sunday schools, churches and missions of religious bodies in all parts of the United Kingdom. The boys wear a simple uniform, and are exercised in military drill. The total number enrolled (1910) in the United Kingdom was 65,000, with 6,400 officers; about 200 companies within the London council, with a strength of 9,500. The movement has extended to the United States and the colonies; the total strength throughout the world being 120,000. Headquarters: 30, George Square, Glasgow. London office: 34, Paternoster Row, E.C.

BRABANT, part of Holland and Belgium, an ancient duchy, part of Charlemagne's empire, fell to his son Charles, 806. It became a separate duchy (called at first Lower Lorraine) in 959. It descended to Philip II. of Burgundy, 1429, and in regular succession to the emperor Charles V. In the 17th century it was held by Holland and Austria, as Dutch Brabant and the Walloon provinces, and underwent many changes through the wars of Europe. The Austrian division was taken by the French in 1746 and 1794. It was united to the Netherlands in 1814, but South Brabant was given to Belgium, 1830. The heir of the throne of Belgium is styled duke of Brabant; see Belgium.

BRACELETS are of great antiquity, and have been worn by almost every nation, savage or civilised. Bracelets were in use in Egypt at a very early period. Frequent mention is made in the Bible of this custom. Greek and Roman women wore this ornament, and a kind of bracelet (armilla) was conferred on the Roman soldier as a reward for bravery. Bracelets constituted the chief ornament of the ancient German tribes, and are frequently found in ancient graves.

BRADFORD, West Riding of Yorkshire, an ancient seat of the woollen manufacture; made a parliamentary borough in 1832; has thriven since 1851. Constituted a county by itself by local government act of 1888; made a city June, 1897. Population, 1901, 279,767; 1909 (est.), 293,983.

BRADLAUGH CASE, see Parliament, 1880-5. Mr. Charles Bradlaugh, M.P. for Northampton, died 30 Jan. 1891, aged 57.

BRADSHAW'S RAILWAY GUIDE was first published by Mr. G. Bradshaw, assisted by Mr. W. J. Adams, in Dec. 1841. The Continental Bradshaw was established in 1848.

The beginning of railway guides is involved in obscurity. Mr. Bradshaw issued his first railway time tables in two forms, one for the Liverpool and Manchester district, and one for London and the Birmingham district, 19 and 25 Oct. 1839. His Railway Companion appeared in 1840.

BRAGANZA, a city in Portugal, gave title to Alfonso, natural son of John I. of Portugal (in 1422), founder of the house of Braganza. When the nation, in a bloodless revolution in 1640, threw off the Spanish yoke, John duke of Braganza was called to the throne as John IV., and his descendants have since reigned over Portugal.

BRAHMINS, Hindoo priests, the highest of the four castes. Pythagoras is thought to have learned from them his doctrine of the Metempsychosis; and it is affirmed that some of the Greek philosophers went to India on purpose to converse with them. The Brahmins derive their name from Brahmah, one of the three beings whom God, according to their theology, created, and with whose assistance He formed the world. Consult "Brahmanism and Hinduism," 1887, and "Indian Wisdom," 1893, by Monier Williams. See Vedas and Buddhism.

BRAINTREE CASE (in Essex) decided in 1842 by Dr. Lushington, who determined that a minority in a parish vestry cannot levy a church rate.

BRAKES, see under Railways.

BRAMHAM (W. R. York): near here the earl of Northumberland and lord Bardolf were defeated and slain by sir Thomas Rokeby, the general of Henry IV., 19 Feb. 1408; and Fairfax was defeated by the royalists under the earl of Newcastle, 29 March, 1643.

BRANDENBURG, a city in Prussia, founded by the Slavonians, who gave it the name of Bamber, which signified Guard of the Forest, according to some; others explain the name as Burg, or city, of the Brenns. Henry I., surnamed the Fowler, after defeating the Slavonians, fortified "Brandenbor," 926, as a rampart against the Huns, and bestowed the government on Sigefroi, count of Ringelheim, with the title of margrave, or protector of the marches or frontiers. The emperor Sigismund gave perpetual investiture to Frederick IV. of Nuremberg, of the house of Hohenzollern, ancestor of the royal family of Prussia, made elector in 1417. For a list of the margraves since 1134, see Prussia. Population (City), 51,239.

BRANDY (German Branntwein, burnt wine). The spirit distilled from wine. Alcohol appears to have been known to Raymond Lully in the 13th century, and to have been manufactured in France early in the 14th. It was at first used medicinally, and miraculous cures were ascribed to its influence. In 1852, 3,959,452; in 1866, 5,621,930; in 1877, 2,062,007; in 1888, 2,655,004; in 1900, 2,509,205; in 1905, 2,037,507; in 1908, 1,732,299 gallons of foreign brandy were imported into the United Kingdom. In 1908, 48,332,345 gallons of spirits were manufactured in Britain. Cognac is distilled from wine grown in the two districts of Charente and Charente Inférieure.

See Fenels, Alfred Reitel . . . . . 7 Mar. 1906

BRANDYWINE, a river in N. America, near which a battle took place between the British, under Howe, and the Americans under Washington, in which the latter (after a day's fight) were defeated with great loss, 11 Sept. 1777. Philadelphia fell into the possession of the victors.

BRANKS, a kind of bridle constructed of iron bands, acting as a gag, formerly used in England and Scotland as an instrument of punishment for scolds, and slanderous women. The culprit was paraded through the streets by the bellman, beadle, or constable, or chained to the market cross, where she was exposed to public ridicule. The date when it was first used is unknown. Found in Edinburgh, 1567, Glasgow, 1574, Stirling, 1600, Manchester, 1623, Worcester, 1658. A brank in Walton-on-Thames is dated 1633. One called the "witches bridle of Forfar," 1661, has a long piece of iron with three sharp spikes in place of the usual gag. Examples are to be seen in the Ashmolean Museum, Oxford, and the Antiquarian Museum, Edinburgh, and elsewhere.

BRASS. That mentioned in the Bible was most probably bronze. When Lucius Mummius burnt Corinth to the ground, 146 B.C., he found immense riches, and during the conflagration, it is said, all the metals in the city melted, and running together, formed the valuable composition described as Corinthian Brass. This is well doubted, for the Corinthian artists had long before obtained great credit for their method of combining gold and silver with copper. Du Fresnoy. Some of the English sepulchral engraved brasses are said to be as old as 1277; a white brass produced by Mr. P. M. Parsons, about 1875.

BRAVO CASE. Mr. Charles Delauney Turner Bravo, barrister, died suddenly and mysteriously (at Balham, county of London), suicide suspected, 18 April, 1876; open verdict at inquest; new inquest ordered, 26 June, 1876; began 10 July. Verdict: "Wilful murder by administration of tartar emetic; but not sufficient evidence to fix the guilt upon any person," 11 Aug. 1876.

BRAY, Berks. Fuller says that its vicar, Symon Symonds, was twice a papist and twice a Protestant—in the reigns of Henry VIII., Edward VI., Mary, and Elizabeth (1533–1558). Upon being called a turn-coat, he said he kept to his principle, that of "living and dying the vicar of Bray." The story is doubted. The modern song refers to the political changes of the 17th and 18th centuries. Bray, the "Irish Brighton," a beautiful seaside town 13 miles S.E. of Dublin, with esplanade a mile long. Pop. 6,888.

BRAY'S ASSOCIATES for founding clerical libraries and supporting negro schools. This society began in 1723, by Dr. Thomas Bray, rector of Sheldon, appointing trustees to expend 900*l.* bequeathed by Mr. D'Allone for the instruction of negroes. In 1733 these trustees received their present name, and their fund was increased by legacies in 1767 and 1768.

Dr. Bray, who was one of the founders of the Society for Propagating the Gospel, and who had a great influence as commissary in Maryland for the bishop of London, about 1672, died 15 Feb. 1733, bequeathing part of his books to Stion College and part to found a parochial library, under certain conditions, coupled with at Maidstone; and also money for other religious purposes. The associates assist schools and libraries in the colonies, and parochial libraries at home.

BRAZEN BULL, said to have been contrived by Perillus, at Athens, for Phalaris, tyrant of Agrigentum, 570 B.C. It had an opening in the side to admit the victims, and a fire was kindled underneath to roast them to death. Phalaris ordered the artist to make the first experiment. Pindar (522–422 B.C.) speaks of the cruelties of Phalaris, but later writers give him a different character.

BRAZIL, formerly an empire in South America, was discovered by Vincent Pinzon, 26 Jan. 1500. Pedro Alvarez de Cabral, a Portuguese, driven upon its coasts by a tempest, April following, called it the land of the Holy Cross; but it was subsequently named Brazil, on account of its red wood. The French having seized on Portugal in 1807, the royal family and nobles embarked for Brazil, and landed 7 March, 1808. The dominant religion is Roman Catholic; but others are tolerated. Constitution of 25 March, 1824; modified 12 Aug. 1834 and 12 May, 1840. Population in 1888, 14,002,335; 1910 (est.), 24,000,000. Returns for 1909 from: revenue, 32,067,000*l.*; expenditure, 30,875,524*l.*; exports, valued 63,724,440*l.*; imports, valued 37,139,354*l.* The total debt (external, internal and floating), 131,432,780*l.* sterling, Dec. 31, 1908. * Award states that the limit of the zone of territory over which the rights of sovereignty of one or other of the two parties must be regarded as established could not be precisely fixed; topographical lines were therefore adopted: "The frontier between British Guiana and Brazil remains fixed by the line which starts from mt. Yakontipi, continues in an easterly direction along the watershed to the source of the Ireng (Mahu), proceeds down the course of that river to its confluence with the Tacutu, follows the course of the Tacutu to its source, where it joins the line of frontier established by the declaration annexed to the treaty of arbitration concluded in London by the high contracting parties concerned on 6 Nov. 1901. In virtue of that declaration, all that part of the zone in dispute lying to the east of the line of frontier will belong to Great Britain, and all that part which is to the west will belong to Brazil. The frontier, along the rivers Ireng (Mahu) and Tacutu, remain fixed by the Thalweg, and the said rivers will be open to free navigation of the two States bordering on them. When the rivers divide into several branches, the frontier will follow the Thalweg of the most easterly branch."

BREAD. Ching-Noung, the successor of Fohi, is reputed to have been the first who taught men (the Chinese) the art of husbandry, and the method of making bread from wheat, and wine from rice, 1998 B.C. Univ. Hist. Baking of bread was known in the patriarchal ages: see Eccodus xii. 15. It became a profession at Rome, 170 B.C. After the conquest of Macedon, 148 B.C., numbers of Greek bakers came to Rome, obtained special privileges, and soon obtained a monopoly. During the siege of Paris by Henry IV., owing to famine, bread, which had been sold whilst any remained for a crown a pound, was at last made from the bones of the charnel-house of the Holy Innocents, A.D. 1594. Hénault. In the time of James I., barley bread was used by the poor; and now in Ireland, coal-fish, beaten to powder, is made into bread; potato-bread is used in Ireland. The London Bakers' Company was incorporated in 1307. Bread-street was once the London market for bread. Until 1302, the London bakers were not allowed to sell any in their own shops. Stowe. Bread was made with yeast by the English bakers in 1634. In 1856 and 1857 Dr. Dauglish patented a mode of making "aerated bread," in which carbonic acid gas is combined with water and mixed with the flour, and which is said to possess the advantages of cleanliness, rapidity, and uniformity. In 1862 a company was formed to encourage Stevens' bread-making machinery. An act for regulating bakehouses was passed in July 1863. A strike of the journeymen bakers of the metropolis, 23 Sept., was settled by concessions, 9 Oct. 1872. A Bread Reform League formed a meeting at the Mansion House, London, 17 Dec. 1883. The Bread Union, limited, established in London, Sept. 1889; failure, Oct. 1890. Delegated meeting of working bakers in London, demanding increased pay and shorter time of labour, 5 Sept.; strike averted by concessions, Nov. 1889.

ASSIZE OF BREAD. The first statute for the regulation of the sale of bread was 3 John, 1203. The chief justiciary, and a baker commissioned by the king, had the inspection of the assize. Matthew Paris. The assize was further regulated by statute in 21 Hen. III. 1256, and 1 Anne, 1705. Bread Act, Ireland, placing its sale on the same footing as in England, 1 Vict. 1838. Bread was directed to be sold by weight in London in 1820; the statute "Assessa Panis" was repealed in 1824; and the sale of bread throughout the country was regulated in 1836.

In France the old laws were superseded, and a law enabling the municipalities to fix the price of bread (still unrepealed) was passed, July, 1791.

BREAD-FRUIT TREE, a native of the South Sea Islands. A vessel under captain Bligh was fitted out to convey some of these trees to various British colonies in 1789 (see Bounty), and again in 1791. The number taken on board at Otaheite was 1151. Some were left at St. Helena, 352 at Jamaica, and five were reserved for Kew Gardens, 1793. The tree was successfully cultivated in French Guiana, 1808.

It stretches 5280 feet across the sound, is 360 feet in breadth at the bottom and more than 30 at the top, and consumed 3,660,000 tons of granite blocks, from one to five tons each, up to April, 1841, and cost a million and a half sterling. The architects were Mr. John Rennie and his son Sir John. The first stone of the lighthouse on its western extremity was laid 1 Feb. 1841. Breakwaters have been constructed at Holyhead, Portland, Dover, Middlesborough, &c. From this great dépôt of the French navy, numerous squadrons were equipped against England, among them the fleet which lord Howe defeated on 1 June, 1794. The breviary is ascribed to pope Gelasius I. about 492. It was first called the custos, and afterwards the breviary; came into use among the ecclesiastical orders about 1080; and was reformed by the councils of Trent and Cologne, and by Pius V., Urban VIII., and other popes. The quality of type in which the breviary was first printed is said to have given the name to the printing type called brevier.

The Stanza Hora, "Book of Hours," a collection of illuminated MSS. of the 15th and 16th centuries, formerly the property of the emperor Charles V. and his successors, was eventually acquired by Mr. Malcolm, of Pollatlock, who gave it in 1803 to the British Museum, which already possessed the breviaries of Isabella the Catholic, and her daughter Joan. BRICKS were used in Babylon, Chaldæa, Egypt (cf. Ex. i. 12, 14), Greece, and Rome; in England by the Romans. The size was regulated by order of Charles I., 1625. Taxed, 1784. The number of bricks which paid duty in England in 1820 was 949,000,000; in 1830, above 1,100,000,000; in 1840, 1,400,000,000; and in 1850, 1,700,000,000. BRIDEWELL, once a palace of king John, near Fleet-ditch, London, 1210, was given to the city for a workhouse by Edward VI., 1553.* The New Bridewell prison, erected in 1829, was pulled down in 1864; that of Tothill-fields was rebuilt in 1831.

In a different form the game was played in Constantinople in 1860; and a variation of it is known in Russia under the name of "Yeralash"; it is also popular in Holland.

BRIDGES were first of wood. There are ancient stone bridges in China. Abydos is famous for the bridge of boats which Xerxes built across the Hellespont, 480 B.C. Trajan's magnificent stone bridge over the Danube, 4770 feet in length, was built in A.D. 105. Brotherhoods for building bridges existed in S. France about 1180. The Devil's bridge in the Canton of Uri was built on two high rocks and many stories have been invented to account for it. At Schaffhausen an extraordinary bridge was built over the Rhine, 400 feet wide: there was a pier in the middle of the river, but it is doubtful whether the bridge rested upon it; a man of the lightest weight felt the bridge totter under him, yet waggons heavily laden passed over without danger. The bridge was destroyed by the French in 1799. See Hammersmith, London, Waterloo, Blackfriars, Southwark, Forth, Tay, Tower, Westminster, and other bridges, in separate articles. The chief Thames bridges were freed from toll 24 May, 1879, and 26 June, 1880.

* Of the old buildings little remains: merely offices and a few cells for refractory City apprentices. By the Charity Commissioners' scheme (1866) the annual income (£4,682, in 1876) is devoted to the maintenance of two industrial schools: for boys, at Witley, Surrey; for girls, at St. George's fields.

The length of the canal is about twenty-nine miles. The duke's canals connected the Thames, Humber, Severn and Mersey; and London, Hull, Bristol, and Liverpool.

BRITISH COLUMBIA (N. America). In June, 1858, news came to California that in April gold had been found in abundance on the mainland of North America, a little to the north and east of Vancouver's Island. A great influx of gold-diggers (in a few weeks above 50,000) from all parts was the consequence; and Mr. Douglas, governor of Vancouver's Island, evinced much ability in preserving order. The territory with adjacent islands was made a British colony with the above title, and placed under Mr. Douglas. The colony was nominated and the government settled by 21 & 22 Vict. c. 99 (Aug. 1858), and a bishop nominated in 1859.

Visited by the marquis of Lorne and princess Louise, 20 Sept. 1882.—For a dispute in July, 1859, see United States. Vancouver's Island was incorporated with the colony in 1866, and Victoria was made the capital, 24 May, 1868. Recent lieutenant-governors: Hon. T. R. McInnes, 1897; sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière, 22 June, 1900. The colony was annexed to Canada, 1871. Population, 1901, 140,000.

miracles, the Pentateuch, creeds and kindred subjects, and aroused a storm of hostile criticism from the bishops and "orthodox" members of the Church. The publication (1862 et seq.) of Dr. Colenso's work on the Pentateuch gave rise to still further controversy (see Church of England, May 20, 1863, et seq.). Although not numerically a strong party, the influence of broad-churchism has made itself felt among all sections of the Church, and includes among its past and present adherents such names as Dr. Arnold, dean Stanley, canon Kingsley, Aug. William and Julius C. Hare, Stopford Brooke, bishop Westcott, canon Driver, bishop Moorhouse, H. R. Haweis, canon Cheyne, dean Robinson, canon Henson, and other able and distinguished men. The attitude of the Broad Church school may be thus briefly stated. It pays little attention to either dogma or ceremony; it seeks to extend the liberty of belief within the Church to its greatest possible extent; it attaches great importance to the social Christian virtues and purity of life, adopting the precepts rather than the dogmas of religion. The "Churchmen's Union" (which see), an association of clergy holding "broad" views, but not necessarily members of the Broad Church school, was formed at the Bradford Church Congress, 1893. A manifesto, signed by 101 clergymen, including 3 deans, expressing the desire that greater latitude should be permitted in the interpretation of subjects of belief, in view of the development of the higher criticism (which see), issued, 20 April, 1905. An animated correspondence followed in the columns of the Standard.

Bronze is composed of copper and tin, with sometimes a little zinc and lead. BROWN'S INSURRECTION, see United States, 1859.

BRUCE'S TRAVELS. James Bruce, the "Abyssinian traveller," set out in June, 1768, to discover the source of the Nile. Proceeding first to Cairo, he navigated the Nile to Syene, thence crossed the desert to the Red Sea, and, arriving at Jeddah, passed some months in Arabia Felix, and after various detentions reached Gondar, the capital of Abyssinia, in Feb. 1770. On 14 Nov. 1770, he obtained a sight of the sources of the Blue Nile. He returned to England in 1773, and died 27 April, 1794.

BRUGES, Belgium, in the 7th century was capital of Flanders, and in the 13th and 14th centuries almost the commercial metropolis of the world. BRUNSWICK CLUBS, established to maintain the house of Hanover and the Protestant ascendancy in church and state, began in England at Maidstone, 18 Sept. 1828; in Ireland at the Rotunda in Dublin, 4 Nov. same year. Other cities formed similar clubs.

BRUNSWICK. HOUSE OF. The duchy of Brunswick, in Lower Saxony, was conquered by Charlemagne, and governed afterwards by counts and dukes. Albert-Azzo II. marquis of Italy and lord of Este, died in 1097, and left by his wife Cunegonde (the heiress of Guelph duke of Carinthia in Bavaria) a son, Guelph, who was invited into Germany by Imitza, his mother-in-law, and invested with all the possessions of his wife's step-father, Guelph of Bavaria; see Bavaria. His descendant, Henry the Lion, married Maud, daughter of Henry II. of England, and was the founder of the Brunswick family. His dominions were very extensive; but having refused to assist the emperor Frederick Barbarossa in a war against pope Alexander III., through the emperor's resentment he was proscribed at the diet at Wurtzburg, in 1180. The duchy of Bavaria was given to Otho of Wittelsbach, ancestor of the family of Bavaria; the duchy of Saxony to Bernard Ascanius, founder of the house of Anhalt; and his other territories to different persons. On this, he retired to England; but at the intercession of our Henry II. Brunswick and Luneburg were restored to him. The house of Brunswick in 1409 divided into several branches. Brunswick was included by Napoleon in the kingdom of Westphalia in 1806, but was restored to the duke in 1815.—Population of the duchy of Brunswick in 1905, 485,958; city, 136,397. BUCCANEERS, cruel piratical adventurers, French, English, and Dutch, who commenced their depredations on the Spaniards of America soon after the latter had taken possession of that continent and the West Indies. Their numbers were much increased by a twelve years' truce between the Spaniards and Dutch in 1609, when many of the discharged sailors joined the buccaneers. The first levy of ship-money in England in 1635 was to defray the expense of chastising these pirates. The principal commanders of the first buccaneers were Montbar, Lolonois, Basco, and Morgan. Van Horn, of Ostend, captured Vera Cruz, 1603; Morgan took Panama, 1670; Gramont seized Campeachy, 1685; and Pointis took Carthage, 1697; all gained enormous booty. In 1761 it was bought by George III., who in 1775 settled it on his queen, Charlotte. She made it her town residence; and here all her children, except the eldest, were born. Here were married the duke of York and princess Frederica of Prussia, in 1791; the duke of Gloucester and princess Mary, 1816;

the prince of Hesse-Homburg and princess Elizabeth, 1818; and the duke of Cambridge and princess of Hesse the same year. The house was pulled down in 1825, and the present palace commenced on its site. After an expenditure of nearly a million sterling, it was completed, and occupied by queen Victoria, 13 July, 1837. Further improvements were made in 1853. The marble arch, taken down from the exterior of this palace, was re-erected at Cumberland-gate, Hyde-park, 29 March, 1851.

It suffered much in 1848; was entered without resistance by the Austrians, 5 Jan. 1849; stormed, 20 May; given up by Russians to Austrians, July, 1849. BUDDHISM, the chief religion in Asia beyond the Ganges, and in China, Japan, and Ceylon, originated with Gautama Siddhartha, the Sakya Muni, generally termed Buddha, or "the enlightened," a prince of Kapilavastu in Central India, said to have been born 623, and to have died 543 B.C.

In 486 B.C. he, disgusted with the behaviour of the Brahmins, he retired from the world for a time, and on coming forth, preached a new religion so successfully that it predominated in India till the 16th century, A.D.

Buddhism inculcates strict morality; it forbids killing, stealing, adultery, lying, and drunkenness, and every shade of these vices, and declares charity or love to be the source of all virtues. Some writers assert that Buddhism includes belief in the transmigration of souls, and the absorption of good souls into God himself, from whom they have emanated; others reckon annihilation or eternal sleep (the Nirvāna) amongst Buddhist tenets.

A form of Buddhism, termed the religion of Fō, exists in China, besides the system of Confucius and Lao-se. It is said to have been introduced in the reign of Ming-ti, A.D. 628.

The Buddhists in the world are estimated at 455,000,000. Buddhism in Japan reported to be declining, 3,737 temples in Kioto, the old capital, and 3,555 in 1889.

Pan-American Exhibition, opened 20 May, 1901; president McKinley shot at and wounded here by Leon Czolgosz, 5 Sept. 1901. See Niagara, 1890.

BUFFOONS were originally mountebanks in the Roman theatres. Their shows were discouraged by Domitian, and abolished by Trajan, 98; see Jesters.

BUFFS, this famous regiment took its name from the distinguishing colour of its uniform—coats faced with buff, and waistcoats, breeches and stockings of the same hue. The "Old Buffs" were raised in 1689 (it is stated by some that they were raised by Charles II., and were called the "Holland regiment"). At one period they were known as the "Buff Howards," from Howard, their colonel (1737-1749). The "Buff" is the 3rd (East Kent) regiment, and is one of the three corps possessing the privilege of marching through the city of London with fixed bayonets and with colours flying. The "Ross-shire Buffs," the old 78th regiment, form the 2nd battalion of the Seaforth Highlanders (the duke of Albany's). Brewer.

BUILDING. In early times men dwelt in caves; wood and clay were the first building materials. Building with stone was early among the Tyrians. In Ireland a castle was built of stone at Tuam by the king of Connaught, in 1161; and it was "so new and uncommon as to be called the Wonderful Castle." Building with brick was introduced by the Romans into their provinces. Alfred encouraged it in England in 886. It was adopted by the earl of Arundel, about 1508, London being then almost wholly built of wood; see Architecture.

Building acts were passed by Elizabeth in 1566, 1590, and 1592; and by Charles II. in 1667. Recent acts are very numerous. The Building Act for the Metropolis, 7 & 8 Vict. c. 4 (1844), was amended in 1855, 1860, 1862, 1871, 1872, and 1880.
Building societies, formed to enable a person to purchase a house by paying money periodically to a society for a certain number of years, instead of paying rent to a landlord, began about 1836, when an act was passed for their regulation. Their nature and objects having been considerably changed, a new act was passed 30 July, 1874, another, 1894. Building Societies in United Kingdom: 1877, 715; 1882, 1,206; 1887, 2,197; 1900, 2,239; 1891, England and Wales: 2,262; Scotland, 61; Ireland, 50; 1895, England and Wales: 2,181; Scotland, 136; Ireland, 56; 1898, England and Wales: 2,219; 1899, 2,124; 1900, 2,031; Scotland, 144; 1893, 135; 1900, 139; Ireland, 62;

Annual meetings of the Building Societies Association held: Feb. 1872; 10 Jan. 1893, 1894.
London and General Bank established in 1882 under the influence of Mr. Jabez Balfour, in connection with the Liberator Permanent Building and Investment Society, which was founded in 1868, and closely combined with the Land Allotment Company and several other companies, forming what is termed the "Balfour group." This body, professing to have a capital of 7,000,000*l.*, by means of prospectuses, false accounts and balance-sheets, attracted thousands of shareholders and depositors. Estates were purchased, speculations undertaken, dividends were paid out of fictitious profits, and large sums were absorbed by managing directors. The bank and companies failed Oct. 1892; official liquidators were appointed. An appeal was made for the poorer sufferers, and a committee was appointed Dec. 1892; 30,226*l.* received up to 18 Oct. 1893; much relief given to the sufferers, reported May, 1894; total, 114,360*l.*; about 92,000*l.* expended, reported 10 April. 1903
 Mr. Jabez Spencer Balfour, M.P. for Burnley, accused of fraud connected with this society; absconds 14 Dec. 1892; at Buenos Ayres, April, 1893; is arrested near Buenos Ayres, Jan. 1894; negotiations for extradition; sails for England, 7 April, 1895; arrives 6 May, 1895

 See Trials, March, 1893-1895 and 1905; Strikes, 1899.

BULGARIA, the ancient Moesia Inferior, a principality tributary to Turkey. The Bulgarians were a Slavonian tribe, who harassed the Eastern empire and Italy from 499 to 678, when they established a kingdom. They defeated Justinian II., 687; but were subdued, after several conflicts, by the emperor Basil, in 1018. After defeating them in 1014, and taking 15,000 Bulgarian prisoners, he caused their eyes to be put out, leaving one eye only to every hundredth man, to enable him to conduct his countrymen home. The kingdom was re-established in 1186; but after several changes was conquered by Bajazet and annexed to the Ottoman empire, 1396. Bulgaria was a chief site of the Russo-Turkish war (which see), 1877-8. Population of Bulgaria and Eastern Roumelia, 4,035,623 in 1905; 4,158,409 in 1908. BULL, or EDICT OF THE POPE. The bulla is properly the seal, either of gold, silver, lead, or wax. On one side are the heads of Peter and Paul; and on the other the name of the pope, and year of his pontificate. A bull against heresy was issued by Gregory IX. in 1231. Pius V. published a bull against Elizabeth, 25 April, 1570; in 1571 bulls were forbidden to be promulgated in England. The bull Unigenitus (beginning with this word) against the Jansenists was issued by Clement XI., 1713; confirmed by Benedict XIII., 1725. The Golden Bull of the emperor Charles IV., so-called from its golden seal, was made the fundamental law of the German empire, at the diet of Nuremberg, 1356; see Brazen Bull. Pius IX. published an encyclical letter censuring modern errors, 8 Dec. 1864; see under Rome; see Stocks.

BULL-BAITING or BULL-FIGHTING, was an amusement at Stamford in the reign of John, 1209; and at Tutbury, 1374. In the Sports of England, we read of the "Easter fierce hunts, when foaming boars fought for their heads, and lusty bulls and huge bears were baited with dogs"; and near the Clink, London, was the Paris, or Bear Garden, so celebrated in the time of Elizabeth for the exhibition of bear-baiting, then a fashionable amusement. A bill to abolish bull-baiting was thrown out in the commons, chiefly through the influence of Mr. William Windham, who made a speech in favour of the custom, 24 May, 1802. It was made illegal in 1835; see Cruelty to Animals. Bull-fights were introduced into Spain about 1260; abolished there, "except for pious and patriotic purposes," in 1784. Bull-fights are very common in Spain. A bull-fight at Lisbon, attended by 10,000 spectators, on Sunday, 14 June, 1840; one took place at Havre, 5 July, 1868. Somewhat theatrical fights with Spanish bulls, at the Agricultural Hall, London, were stopped 28 March, 1870, for cruelty. At a bull-fight at Marseilles about 17 persons were killed, and 230 injured, by the fall of wooden stands, Sunday, 14 Aug., 1881. A bull-fight at Nîmes (since prohibited), 12 June, 1884.

A bull-fight at the Hippodrome, Paris, for sufferers by inundations in S. France, very successful, no casualties, Spanish ambassador present, 16 Jan. 1887

Bull-fights formed part of the entertainments at Paris during the universal exhibition in 1889 renewed with restrictions May et seq. 1890
 Prohibited in France 25 Sept. 1894

 Collapse of a stand at a bull-fight at Pedreguer, Alicante, 12 deaths, 200 injured 13 Nov. 1900

BULLETS of stone were in use 1514. Iron ones are mentioned in the Federa, 1550. Lead bullets were made before the close of the 16th century. The conoidal cup rifle-ball was invented by capt. Minié, about 1833. Other and greatly improved bullets have been since devised for use with modern rifles, such as the Martini-Henry, the Enfield-Martini, the Mauser, the Mannlicher, and the Lee-Metford. The dum-dum bullet, so named from its having been invented and manufactured at the arsenal of that name near Calcutta, flattens out on striking an object. A bullet, a modification of the Lee-Metford bullet, having similar properties as the dum-dum (the nickel sheathing of the bullet being stripped from the "nose" so as to expose the soft lead packing), was issued to the army in 1899, but was not used, it being considered that it came, like the dum-dum, under the category of "explosive bullets," condemned by the Geneva Convention. It is still employed against savage races.

A bullet-proof coat or cuirass invented by Mr. Dowe at Vienna: successfully tested at Mannheim; reported efficient but heavy 13 March, 1894; tested at the Alhambra, London, in the presence of the duke of Cambridge, and other officers; report as to practical value indecisive, 23 May, 1894. The Prussian war office, after various trials, declare the cuirass to be worthless 3 Sept. 1894
 Mr. Maxim's bullet-proof cuirass; indecisive trials at Erith, 2 June, and at the Aquarium 9 June, 1895
 Mr. Loris' bullet-proof and dagger-proof cuirasses exhibited at the Crystal Palace 20 Aug. "
 Capt. Boynton's bullet-proof shield tried at Sheffield, 15 Sept. "

BULLION, uncoined gold and silver. The "Bullion Report" of a parliamentary committee in 1810, principally guided by Mr. Horner and Mr. (afterwards Sir R.) Peel, established the conclusion that paper money is always liable to be over-issued, and consequently depreciated, unless it be at all times immediately convertible into gold. This principle has been adopted in British monetary arrangements; see Bank of England.

BULL-RUN BATTLES, see Manassas.

BULWER-CLAYTON TREATY, concluded 19 April, ratified 4 July, 1850, by which Sir Henry Lytton Bulwer for the British, and Mr. Clayton for the American government, declared that neither should obtain exclusive control over the proposed ship canal through Central America, or erect any fortification on any part of the country. Disputes afterwards arose with respect to this treaty, and the connection of Great Britain with the Mosquito territory (which see), which were settled in 1857.

Its abrogation was proposed by the Americans in 1880, on account of De Lesseps' plan for a canal in Central America. The treaty was finally superseded by the Hay-Pauncefote Isthmian canal treaty, signed by Mr. Hay and Lord Pauncefote at Washington, 18 Nov. 1901; ratified 21 Feb. 1902.

BUNDSCHUH, see Jacquerie.

BUNHILL-FIELDS (originally Bonhill-Field), a burial-ground near Finsbury-square, E. London, termed by Southey the "Campo Santo of the Dissenters;" first used in 1665. Here were interred Thomas Goodwin (1679), John Owen (1683), Isaac Watts (1748), John Bunyan (1688), George Fox, the Quaker (1690), general Fleetwood, son-in-law of Cromwell (1692), and Daniel De Foe (1731). Cunningham. An act for the preservation of the ground as an open space was passed, 15 July, 1867, and it was re-opened by the lord mayor, 14 Oct., 1869; and a monument to De Foe, subscribed for by boys and girls, was inaugurated, 16 Sept. 1870.

BUNKER HILL, more properly Breed's hill (near Boston, U.S.). Here the British (nearly 3000), after severe loss, compelled the revolted Americans (about 5000) to retreat, after a desperate conflict, 17 June, 1775. Ralph Farnham, who was present at the battle, died on 28 Dec. 1860, aged 104½ years. He was introduced to the prince of Wales when in America. Centenary of the battle celebrated June, 1875.

BURFORD CLUB, the appellation given (according to Mr. Laver, the barrister, a conspirator, see Laver) by the Pretender and his agents to a pretended Jacobite club, of which lord Orrery was chairman, and lord Strafford, sir Henry Goring, earl Cowper, Mr. Hutcheson, the bishop of Rochester, sir Constantine Phipps, general Webb, lord Bingley, lord Craven, Mr. Dawkins, lord Scarsdale, lord Bathurst, Mr. Shippen, and lord Gower, were members. This story was set aside by the solemn declarations of lord Cowper and lord Strafford. The list of this club was published in the Weekly Journal, printed in Whitefriars; but when Read, the printer, was ordered to appear at the bar of the house, he absconded. March, 1722. Salmon.

BURGESSES, from the French Bourgeois, a distinction coeval in England with corporations. They were called to parliament in England, 1265; in Scotland in 1326; and in Ireland about 1365. Burgesses to be resident in the places they represented in parliament, 1 Hen. V. (1413); see Borough.

BURGH, see Borough. Burgh Convention, see under Home Rule.

BURGHES AND ANTI-BURGHES. In 1732 Ebenezer Erskine and others seceded from the church of Scotland. Differing in regard to the interpretation of the burgess oath, they divided into two sections with the foregoing names in 1747. In 1820 they were reunited as the United Associate Synod of the Secession church, which, on 13 May, 1847, joined the Relief church, together forming the United Presbyterian church.

BURGLARY was a capital offence till 1829. Formerly he who convicted a burglar was exempted

BURLINGTON HEIGHTS. After a fierce contest here between the British and the United States American forces, 6 June, 1813, the British carried the heights.

BURLINGTON HOUSE, Piccadilly, London, was built by Denham for lord Burlington, about 1664; and rebuilt by lord Burlington, the architect, about 1731. It was bought for 140,000*l.* by the government, authorised by vote of the house of commons, on 27 July, 1854. It became the home of the Royal, Linnean, and Chemical societies in 1857 (who occupied new rooms in 1873), and of the Antiquaries, Geological, and Royal Astronomical societies in 1873. In 1866, sites for buildings for the University of London and the Royal Academy were granted in the grounds of Burlington House. The entrance, colonnade, &c., were removed in 1868, and the exhibition of the Royal Academy was first opened here 3 May, 1869. Burlington charity school near here, founded 1699.

BURMAH, or BURMESE EMPIRE, founded in the middle of the 18th century by Alompra, the first sovereign of the last dynasty. Our first dispute with this formidable power in 1795 was amicably adjusted by general Erskine. Hostilities were commenced by the British in 1824, and they took Rangoon on May 5. The fort and pagoda of Syriam were taken in 1825. After a short armistice, hostilities were renewed, 1 Dec. same year, and pursued until the successive victories of the British led to the cession of Aracan, and to the signature of peace, 24 Feb. 1826. For the events of this war, and of the war in 1851, see India. Pegu was annexed to our Indian empire, 20 Dec. 1852. The war ended 20 June, 1853. Population of Upper Burnah, 1901, 3,846,908; Lower Burnah, 5,405,967. Capitals of Burnah: lower, Rangoon; upper, Mandalay; northern, Bhamo.

Their powers were increased by Settailla; Tschirnhausen, 1680; Buñon, 1747; and Parker and others more recently. The vestals buried alive on a charge of incontinence, were Minutia, 337 B.C.; Sextilla, 274 B.C.; Cornelia, A.D. 92. Lord Bacon gives instances of the resurrection of persons who had been buried alive; Duns Scotus being of the number. Magna Charta was prepared here by the barons on 20 Nov. 1214. Henry VI. summoned a parliament in Feb. 1447, when Humphry, duke of Gloucester, was imprisoned, and died here, it is supposed by poison. It was almost consumed by fire in 1608, and was desolated by plague in 1636. Population: 1901, 16,255; 1910 (est.), 19,000.

BUSACO, or BUZACO (Portugal). Here the British, under lord Wellington, repulsed the French under Massena, 27 Sept. 1810. The latter lost one general and 1000 men killed, two generals and about 3000 men wounded, and several hundred prisoners; the loss of the allies did not exceed 1300; the British retreated to the lines of Torres Vedras, too strong for Massena to force, and the armies remained in sight of each other to the end of the year.

BUTTER is said to have been used by the Arabs in early times, but not by the Greeks and Romans, who had excellent oil. It is not mentioned as food by Galen A.D. 130-200. It has long been used by northern nations. Various statutes have passed respecting its package, weight, and sale; the principal of which are the 36th & 38th Geo. III. and 10 Geo. IV. 1821. In Africa, vegetable butter is made from the fruit of the shea tree, and is of richer taste, at Kebba, than any butter made from cow's milk. Mungo Park. Buttons largely employed to ornament ladies' dresses, 1873 et seq. Birmingham is the chief centre of the button trade in England. The manufacture of buttons is carried on extensively in France, but in recent years Germany has become a formidable competitor, especially with the cheaper kinds. New York and Philadelphia are the seats of button-making in the United States. Large quantities of buttons are manufactured from the corozo nut (vegetable ivory), mother-of-pearl, glass, various kinds of wood, metal, bone, and horn. Machinery is now much used in making buttons. BYRON'S VOYAGE. Commodore Byron left England on his voyage round the globe, 21 June, 1764, and returned 9 May, 1766. He discovered the populous island in the Pacific Ocean which bears his name, 16 Aug. 1765. Though brave and intrepid, such was his general ill-fortune at sea, that he was called by the sailors of the fleet "Foulweather Jack."

BYTOWN, Canada, was named after col. By, the British surveyor, 1823-6. In 1854 its name was changed to Ottawa, after the river on which it is situated, and in 1858 it was made the capital of the Dominion. See Ottawa.

It was taken successively by the Medes, Athenians, and Spartans. In 340 B.C., in alliance with the Athenians, the Byzantines defeated the fleet of Philip of Macedon. During the wars with Macedon, Syria, &c., it became an ally of the Romans, by whom it was taken, A.D. 73. Rebelling, it was taken after two years' siege, and laid in ruins by Severus in 196. It was refounded by Constantine in 324, and dedicated on 22 May, 330, all the heathen temples being destroyed; and from him it received its name; see Constantinople. BYZANTINE ART flourished from the time of Constantine to about 1204. The BYZANTINE or Eastern empire really commenced in 395, when Theodosius divided the Roman empire; see East. The "Byzantine Historians," from 325 to 1453, were published at Paris, 1645-1711; and at Venice, 1722-33.

CAABA, the shrine of the sacred black stone, kept in a temple at Mecca, and venerated by the Arabs, long before the Christian era. Its guardians, the tribe of Koreish, were defeated by Mahomet, by whose followers it is still venerated.

CABAL. In English history the term has been applied to the cabinet of Charles II. 1667-73; the word Cabal being formed from the initials of their names: sir Thomas, afterwards lord Clifford (C); the lord Ashley (A), (afterwards earl of Shaftesbury); George Villiers, duke of Buckingham (B); Henry, lord Arlington (A); and John, duke of Lauderdale (L). The term had been previously applied to a secret faction or cabinet.

CABBAGES. Some new kinds were brought to England from Holland about 1510, it is said by sir Arthur Ashley of Dorset, and introduced into Scotland by Cromwell's soldiers.

CABBALA, a Jewish system of philosophy or theosophy, deriving its name from a Hebrew word, signifying reception or tradition, said to have been given by God to Adam, and transmitted from father to son by his descendants. It is said to have been lost at the Babylonian captivity (587 B.C.), but to have been revealed again to Ezra. Its supporters assert that the cabalistic book "Sohar," or "Splendour," a mystic commentary on the Pentateuch, was first committed to writing by Simon Ben Jochai, A.D. 72-110. The true date of the books containing the cabbala is now considered to range from 9th to the 14th centuries, and their origin to be the mingling of talmudism with the Greek philosophy termed Neo-Platonism. Some of their dogmas are akin to Christian tenets, such as the trinity, the incarnation, &c. The cabbala exercised much influence upon the mental development of the Jews, and even captivated the greatest thinkers of the 16th and 17th centuries.

CABLES. A machine was invented in 1792 for making them, by which human labour was reduced nine-tenths. Chain cables were introduced into the British navy about 1812; directions for testing them enacted, 1864 and 1874. See Agriculture, 1894; for dates of cable laying, see Electricity, 1859, et seq.

In 1831 they had increased to 165, and then the licences were thrown open. The number in 1862 running in the metropolis exceeded 6000 (of which about 1800 only plied on Sunday). Previous to throwing open the trade, the number of hackney carriages was limited to 1200, when there were few omnibuses. Number in 1871 was 7,818; 1896, 7,585; hansoms, 3,449; clarences; 1907, hansoms, 5,952; clarences, animal power, 3,866; mechanical, 723; 1908, hansoms, 4,826, clarences, animal power, 3,649; mechanical, 2,805. It came into operation 11 July, and on the 27th a general strike of the London cabmen took place. Some alterations having been made in the act, the cabs re-appeared on the stands on the 30th.

It was retaken by the duke of Guise, in the reign of Mary, 7 Jan. 1558, and its loss so deeply touched the queen's heart, as to cause some to say it occasioned her death, which occurred soon afterwards, 17 Nov. same year. "When I am dead," said the queen, "Calais will be found written on my heart." It was taken by the Spaniards, April, 1596, restored, 1598. CALCIUM, the metallic base of lime, was discovered at the Royal Institution, London, by Humphry Davy in 1808.

CALCULATING MACHINES. To avoid errors in computing and printing logarithms and tables of figures, machines to calculate and print have been devised. Pascal, when nineteen years of age, invented one about 1650. The construction of Mr. C. Babbage's differential machine was commenced at the expense of government in 1823, and continued till 1833, when the work was suspended after an expenditure of 17,000*l*. The portion completed was placed in the library of King's College, London; it is now at South Kensington. Professor Clifford, in his lecture at the Royal Institution, 24 May, 1872, stated that Babbage expended 20,000*l*. upon his machines, and that the analytical machine was nearly finished, and would eventually be much used. "Babbage's Calculating Engines: a Collection of Papers relating to them," was published by his son, Gen. Babbage, in 1889. C. Babbage died 1871, aged 78. In 1857, Messrs. E. and G. Schueitz, two Swedish engineers, published in London specimen tables, calculated and printed by machinery constructed between 1837 and 1843, after a study of the account of Mr. Babbage's machine. Messrs. Schueitz brought their machine to England in 1854. It was bought for 1000*l*. by Mr. J. F. Rathbone, an American merchant, to be presented to Dudley observatory in his own town, Albany. In 1857, Messrs. Schueitz were engaged to make one for the British government, which was completed. Mr. Wiberg's machine, exhibited at Paris, Feb. 1863, was much commended. Tables constructed by means of Schueitz's machine, and edited by Dr. W. Farr, were published by the government in 1864. The arithmometer, patented by M. Thomas (de Colmar) in 1822 (?), exhibited at the International exhibitions, 1851 and 1862, is said to be in use in assurance offices. Geo. B. Grant described a simpler machine in the "American Journal of Science," Oct. 1874. Other machines have been constructed since.

An "arithmometer," for adding up figures and printing, was invented by Mr. Burroughs in the United States, and introduced into this country by Mr. H. E. Winter in . . . 1893

CALEDONIA, the Roman name for part of Scotland, north of the wall of Antoninus, so termed by Tacitus, who died on. Venerable Bede says that it retained this name until 258, when it was invaded by a tribe from Ireland, and called Scotia. The ancient inhabitants appear to have been the Caledonians and Picts, tribes of the Celts, who passed over from the opposite coast of Gaul. About the beginning of the 4th century of the Christian era they were invaded (as stated by some authorities) by the Scythians or Scythians (since called Scots), who, having driven the Picts into the north, settled in the Lowlands, and gave their name to the whole country; see Scotland.

CALEDONIAN ASYLUM, ROYAL, for children of indigent respectable Scotch parents, established in 1815, at Caledonian road, London. Some 200 children are maintained and educated. Princess Henry of Battenberg laid the first stone of the new building at Bushey, 10 May, 1902, to which the asylum was removed 26 May, 1903. The Caledonian Society of London holds annual festivals, 25 Jan., Burns's birthday.

CALEDONIAN CANAL, from the North Sea to the Atlantic Ocean. The act for its construction received the royal assent 27 July, 1803; and the works were commenced same year. The nautical intercourse between the western ports of Great Britain and the also of Ireland to the North Sea and Baltic, is shortened in some instances 800, and in others 1,000, miles. A sum exceeding a million sterling was granted by parliament from time to time; and safe navigation for ships was opened 1 Nov. 1822. It has not been successful commercially. CALENDAR, see Jewish Era and Calendar. The Roman calendar was introduced by Romulus, who divided the year into ten months, comprising 304 days, 738 B.C. This year was of fifty days' less duration than the lunar year, and of sixty-one less than the solar year, and its commencement did not correspond with any fixed season. Numa Pompilius, 713 B.C., added two months; and Julius Caesar, 46 B.C., to make it more correct, fixed the solar year at 365 days 6 hours, every fourth year being bissextile or leap-year; see Leap-year. This calendar was defective, as the solar year consists of 365 days, 5 hours, 49 minutes, and not of 365 days 6 hours. The pontiffs erroneously inserted an intercalary day each third instead of each fourth year, so that they had inserted 12 instead of nine 26 Febs. up to B.C. 8; Augustus Caesar ordained that there should be no leap-year for 12 years, until this was rectified. The difference in the 16th century amounted to 10 entire days, the vernal equinox falling on 11th instead of 21st March. To obviate this error, pope Gregory XIII. ordained, in 1582, that that year should consist of 355 days only (5 Oct. became 15 Oct.); and to prevent further irregularity, it was determined that a year ending a century should not be bissextile, with the exception of that ending each fourth century; thus 1700, 1800 and 1900 have not been bissextile, but the year 2000 will be a leap-year. In this manner three days are retraced in 400 years, because the lapse of eleven minutes makes three days in about that period. The year of the calendar is thus made as nearly as possible to correspond with the true solar year, and future errors of chronology are avoided. See New Style and French Revolutionary Calendar. The Greek and Russian calendars still retain the old style.

CALICO, cotton cloth, named from Calicut, a city of India, visited by the Portuguese in 1498. Calico was first brought to England by the East India Company in 1631. Calico-printing and the Dutch loom engine were first used in 1676, when a Frenchman established a factory at Richmond, near London. Anderson. Calicoes were prohibited to be printed or worn in 1700; and again in 1721 a penalty of  $$1$  was laid on the wearer, and 20*d*. on the seller of calico. In 1831, by the exertions of Mr. Charles Poulett Thomson, afterwards, lord Sydenham, and others, the consolidated duty of 3*d*. on the square yard of printed calico was taken off. Since 1834, the manufacture has been greatly increased by the applications of science. Printing cylinders are made by electric deposition, dyes are artificially made from coal tar products, by the discoveries of Liebig, Hofmann, Perkin, and others; see Cotton and Dyeing.

CALIPPIC PERIOD, invented by Calippus, about 330 B.C., to correct the Metonic cycle, consists of four cycles, or of seventy-six years, at the expiration of which he incorrectly imagined the new and full moons return to the same day of the solar year. This period began about the end of June, third year of 112th Olympiad, year of Rome 424, and 330 B.C.

CALIXTINS, 1. A sect derived from the Husites, about 1420 demanded the cup (Greek, Kalix) in the Lord's supper. They were also called Utraquists as partaking of both elements. They were reconciled to the Roman church at the council of Basle,

In 1600 the year began on 7 April, N.S., from which it has now advanced four days, and from the precession of the equinoxes, is still advancing at the rate of a day in sixty years. The number produced by subtracting 3102 from any given year of the Cali Yuga era will be the Christian year in which the given year begins.

CALLAO (Peru). After an earthquake, the sea retired from the shore, and returned in mountainous waves, which destroyed the city in 1687, and on 28 Oct. 1746. CALLIGRAPHY (beautiful writing). Calligraphers are said to have written an elegant distich on a sesamum seed, 472 B.C. In the 16th century Peter Bales wrote the Lord's Prayer, Creed, and Decalogue, two short Latin prayers, his own name, motto, day of the month, year of our Lord, and of the reign of queen Elizabeth (to whom he presented them at Hampton Court), all within the circle of a silver penny, encased in a ring and border of gold, and covered with crystal, so accurately done, as to be plainly legible. Holmshied.

Adopting the reformed doctrines he fled to Angoulême, where he composed his Institutio Christiana Religiois in 1533; published in 1536. He retired to Basle, and settled in Geneva, where he died, 27 May, 1564. He was instrumental in burning Servetus for denying the Trinity in 1553. A formal separation between the Calvinists and Lutherans took place after the conference of Poissy in 1561, where the former expressly rejected the tenth and other articles of the confession of Augsburg, and took the name of Calvinists. In France (see Huguenots) they took up arms against their persecutors. Henry IV., originally a Calvinist, on becoming king, secured their liberty by the Edict of Nantes in 1598 (which see). Calvinistic doctrines appear in the articles of the Church of England and in the confession of the Church of Scotland, and are held by many protestant sects. They include predestination, particular redemption, total depravity, irresistible grace, and the certain perseverance of the saints. See Church of Scotland, 1904-5.

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY.

The early history is traditional till the 12th century. Sigebert, king of the East Angles, is mythically said to have set up a school about 630. Scholars are said to have collected here and to have been favoured by Henry I., 1110. Henry III. granted the first charter in 1231, about which time the students began to live together in hostels, which afterwards became colleges named after saints. It is said that there were 27 hostels in 1280. The university was incorporated in 1571, and sent two members to parliament in 1603. University tests act passed, 16 June, 1870. CAMERONIANS, a name frequently given to the Reformed Presbyterian church of Scotland, the descendants of the covenanters of the 17th century, the established church, 1638-50.* Charles II.

* They were frequently called hill-men or mountain men, and were persecuted from the places and modes of worship to which they were frequently reduced, and McMillanites, from John McMillan, their first minister, after their signed the League and Covenant in 1650, in hopes of recovering his kingdoms, but renounced it in 1661, and revived episcopacy. A revolt ensued in 1666, when many covenanters were slain in battle (in the Pentland hills, &c.), and many refusing to take the oaths required, and declining to accept the king's indulgence, died on the scaffold, after undergoing cruel tortures. The name Cameronian is derived from Richard Cameron, one of their ministers, who was killed in a skirmish, in 1680. On 22 June in that year he and others issued at Sanquhar a declaration for religious liberty. The bi-centenary was kept in 1880. In 1689 they raised a body of soldiers to support William III., who enrolled them under the command of lord Angus, as the 26th regiment, since so famous, now designated the Cameronians (the Scottish Rifles). In 1712 they renewed their public covenants, and are described in one of their tracts as "the suffering anti-popish, and anti-prelatical, anti-erastian, true presbyterian church of Scotland." They have now between thirty and forty congregations in Scotland.—The Cameron Highlanders ("the Queen's Own") formerly the 79th foot, raised in 1793 by Allan Cameron, were not connected with the Cameronian movement.

CAMISARDS (from chemise, Latin camisa, a shirt, which they frequently wore over their dress in night attacks), a name given to the French Protestants in the neighbourhood of the Cévennes (mountain chains in S. France), who after enduring much severe persecution in consequence of the revocation of the edict of Nantes, 22 Oct. 1685, took up arms in July, 1702, to rescue some imprisoned brethren. They revenged the cruelties of their enemies, and maintained an obstinate resistance against the royalist armies commanded by marshal Montrevel and other distinguished generals, till 1705, when the insurrection was suppressed by marshal Villars. After futile conciliatory efforts, several of the heroic leaders suffered death rather than surrender. Cavalier, an able general, unable to carry out a treaty made with Villars, seceded in 1704, entered the British service, and died governor of Jersey, 1740.

CAMLET, formerly made of silk and camel's hair, but now of wool, hair, and silk. Oriental camlet first came here from Portuguese India, in 1660. Anderson.

CAMORRA, a secret society of plunderers and ratters, exacting money from shopkeepers and traders, in Naples (said to have originated from the extreme destitution of the lower classes); tolerated under the Bourbons; checked by the king of Italy; about 80 Camorristi seized and transported, Sept.-Oct. 1874. Many Camorristi seized in the markets at Naples, 30 Aug. and 1 Sept. et seq., 1877. 179 of these tried at Bari, mid-April, May, 1891. The Camorristi are said to be the highest grade of the society named "Mala Vita."

CAMP (Lat. castra, English camp is derived from Lat. campus, a plain), the name given to the place and the aggregate body of tents or huts in the field. Encampments are mentioned about 1490 B.C. (Numbers ii.). The Lacedæmonians among the Greeks were the first who cultivated the art of forming military camps, the form of which was circular. The Romans, whose camps were square and entrenched, attained to a high degree of skill in this science. Polybius, who accompanied Scipio the younger in many campaigns, gives a very full description of the Roman camp. As described by this historian the camp of a consular army accommodated 16,800 foot and 1,800 horse soldiers, and was elaborately constructed. Vestiges of Roman camps exist at the present day in various parts of England and Scotland. The introduction of gunpowder greatly modified the construction and area of camps. Artillery of the most improved type and strong detached forts constitute the chief defensive feature of entrenched camps. The vast size of European armies of the present day necessitate the accommodation of troops in cantonments or bivouacs, but in expeditions in hot climates, with flying columns, tents are used. If occupied for one or two nights only camps are called "flying camps," if for a longer period "standing camps." Camps of exercise of large extent are established at Aldershot (q.v.), Colchester, Shorncliffe, the Curragh, Kildare (q.v.). Bordon (Salisbury Plain) visited by king, 15 July, 1910. A camp was formed in Hyde-park in 1745 and 1814, and at the Alexandra Palace and Hampton Court for the Indian and Colonial troops, 1901-1902 (see Coronation).

CAMPAGNA, near Rome. Its drainage and planting were authorised by the Italian senate, 31 May, 1878; works completed, July, 1895.

To compel railway companies to make compensation for injuries by culpable accidents, 9 & 10 Vict. c. 93 (1846). 3. Against obscene publications, prints, &c., 20 & 21 Vict. c. 83 (1857). In accordance with the second act, the family of a gentleman killed through the breaking of a rail, obtained a verdict for 13,000*l.* from the Great Northern railway company. On appeal the sum was reduced.

These last burnt the town and blew up the citadel. The English logwood-cutters made their settlement here about 1662.

CANDLEMAS DAY, 2 Feb. is kept in the church in memory of the purification of the Virgin, who presented the infant Jesus in the Temple. From the number of candles lit (it is said in memory of Simeon's song, Luke ii. 32, "a Light to lighten the Gentiles," &c.), this festival was called Candlemas, as well as the Purification. Its origin is ascribed by Bede to pope Gelasius in the 5th century, by others to the Roman emperor Justinian, 541. Some antiquarians trace a connection between the Christian festival with the great feast of expiation and purification called Februa, held 15 Feb. in ancient Rome. The practice of lighting the churches was forbidden by order of council, 2 Edw. VI. 1548; but is still continued in the church of Rome. Candlemas is a Scotch quarter-day.

CANDLES. The Roman candles were composed of string surrounded by wax, or dipped in pitch. Splinters of wood fattened were used for light among the lower classes in England, about 1300. Wax candles were little used, and dipped candles were usually burnt. The Wax Chandlers' company was incorporated 1483. Mould candles are said to be the invention of the sieur Le Brez, of Paris. Spermaceti candles are of modern manufacture. The Chinese make candles from wax obtained from the candleberry-tree (myrica cerifera). The duty upon candles made in England, imposed in 1709, amounted to about 500,000*l.* annually when it was repealed in 1831. Improvements in the manufacture of stearine candles, due to the researches on oils and fats by Chevreul, 1811-23. He died 9 April, 1889, aged 102. The plaited wick introduced by Cambacères 1825, improved by Wilson 1844, did away with snuffing. At Price's manufactory at Lambeth, the principles involved in many patents are carried into execution; including those of Gwynne (1840), Jones and Price (1842), and Wilson in 1844, for candles which require no snuffing. When tallow was high in price palm and cocoa-nut oils were for a time extensively used. The discovery of paraffin by Dr. James Young, 1847-50, introduced a material which has practically superseded all others. Price's patent candle company, established 1847, incorporated by act of parliament 1848 and 1857, have the largest candle-making works in the world. In 1870 the manufacture of candles from a mineral substance named ozokerit began.

CANDLESTICKS (or lamp-stands) with seven branches were regarded as emblematical of the priest's office, and were engraven on their seals, cups, and tombs. Bezaleel made "a candlestick of pure gold" for the tabernacle, B.C. 1491 (Exod. xxxvii. 17). Candlesticks were used in Britain in the days of king Edgar, 959 ("silver candelabra and gilt candelabra well and honourably made").

CANDY or KANDY (Ceylon), was taken by a British detachment, 20 Feb. 1803, who capitulated 23 June following, on account of its unhealthiness, and many were treacherously massacred at Colombo, 26 June. The war was renewed in Oct. 1814; the king was made prisoner by general Brownrigg, 19 Feb. 1815; and the sovereignty was vested in Great Britain, 2 March, 1815. Candy has many objects of interest; among these are the governor's house, one of the finest structures in Ceylon, and the Buddhist temple, "the palace of the tooth," containing, it is said, a tooth of Gautama the Buddha, the most sacred spot in the Buddhist world.

CANICULAR PERIOD, see Dog-star.

CANNÆ (Apulia). Here, on 2 Aug. 216 B.C., Hannibal with 50,000 Africans, Gauls, and Spaniards, defeated Æmilius Paulus and Terentius Varro, with 88,000 Romans, and their allies. This great army was nearly annihilated, the far greater part being slain on the field, including the consul Æmilius Paulus, his chief officers, above 80 senators, with many other persons of high rank. Hannibal is said to have lost about 6,000 men. The other consul, Varro, who had escaped with some cavalry, conducted himself with so much discretion and firmness after the battle, that the senate, instead of blaming him for the defeat, thanked him for not despairing of the Roman Commonwealth.

CANNES, a fashionable watering place and seaport of France, in the department of Alpes-Maritimes, situated on a bay of the Mediterranean (22 miles N.W. of Nice). Founded by the Romans between Via Aurelia and the sea. Held as a fief by the convent of the Lérins during the middle ages. In 1580 it was devastated by the great plague, and during the religious wars it was sacked by the duke of Savoy. Napoleon landed at Cannes on his return from Elba, 1815. Its rise as a watering place is due to lord Brougham, who in 1834 selected Cannes as a health resort. The duke of Albany died at the Villa Nevada, 28 March, 1884, and the late queen Victoria visited Cannes in 1887 to inspect the Albert Memorial church of St. George of England, built in memory of the prince. During the winter it is frequented by visitors of all nationalities. Population, 19,385.

CANNIBAL, an Indian term, thought to be a form of Carribal; as Columbus, in 1493, found the Caribs of the West Indies gross cannibals. Anthropophagi (man-eaters) are mentioned by Homer and Herodotus; and the practice still exists in some of the South Sea Islands and other savage countries. For Mignonette case, see Wreck, 1884. Superstitious cannibalism practised in Hayti, 1884.

The first cannon cast in England was by Hugget, at Uckfield, Sussex, 1543.

Mons Meg, a large cannon (above 13 ft. long, 20 inches calibre) in Edinburgh castle, said to have been cast at Mons in Hainault, in 1486, but more probably forged at Castle Douglas, Galloway, by three brothers named McKinn, and presented by them to James II. at the siege of Thrieve castle, 1455. * George Canning was born 11 April, 1770; became foreign secretary in the Portland administration, 1807; fought a duel with Id. Castlereagh and resigned, 1809; president of the India board in 1820; disapproved of the queen's trial and resigned in 1821; appointed governor-general of India in 1822, soon after foreign secretary till 1827, when he became premier. He died 8 Aug. same year.

He had been working for four years on gun-making, and had succeeded in producing "a breech-loading rifled wrought-iron gun of great durability and of extreme lightness, combining a great extent of range and extraordinary accuracy." The range of a 32-lb. gun, charged with 5lb. of powder, was a little more than 5 miles. The accuracy of the Armstrong gun is said at equal distances to be fifty-seven times more than that of our common artillery, which it greatly exceeded also in destructive effects. The government engaged the services of sir W. Armstrong for ten years (commencing with 1855) for 20,000l., as consulting engineer of rifled ordnance.

CAPE ST. VINCENT (S.W. Portugal).
 Sir George Rooke, with twenty-three ships of war, and the Turkish fleet, was attacked by Tourville, with 160 ships, off Cape St. Vincent, when twelve English and Dutch men-of-war, and eighty merchantmen, were captured or destroyed by the French, 16 June, 1693.—Sir John Jervis, with the Mediterranean fleet of fifteen sail, defeated the Spanish fleet of twenty-seven ships of the line off this cape, taking four ships and sinking others, 14 Feb. 1797. For this victory sir John was raised to the peerage as earl St. Vincent. Nelson was engaged in this battle. Near this cape the fleet of dom Pedro, under admiral Charles Napier, captured dom Miguel's fleet, 5 July, 1833.

CAPETIANS, the third race of the kings of France, named from Hugo Capet, count of Paris and Orleans, who seized the throne on the death of Louis V., called the Indolent, 987. Hénault. The first line of the house of Capet ended with Charles IV., in 1328, when Philip VI. of Valois ascended the throne; see France.

CAPE VERD ISLANDS (N. Atlantic Ocean), belonging to Portugal, were known to the ancients as Gorgades, but not to the moderns till discovered by Antonio de Noli, a Genoese navigator in the service of Portugal, 1446, 1450, or 1460. Population, 1900, 147,424; 1910 (est.), 172,000.

CAPILLARITY (the rising of liquids in small tubes, and the ascent of the sap in plants) is said to have been first observed by Niccolò Aggiunti of Pisa, 1600-35. The theory has been examined by Newton, La Place, and others. Dr. T. Young's theory was put forth in 1805, and Mr. Wertheim's researches in 1857.

CAPITOL, said to have been so called from a human head (caput) found when digging the foundations of the fortress of Rome, on Mons Tarpeius. Here a temple was built to Jupiter Capitolinus. The foundation was laid by Tarquinius Priscus, 616 B.C.; the building was continued by Servius Tullius; completed by Tarquinius Superbus, but not dedicated till 507 B.C. by the consul Horatius. It was destroyed by lightning 6 July, 183; burnt during the civil wars, 83; rebuilt by Sylla, and dedicated again by Lutatius Catulus, 69; again burnt A.D. 69, 80; rebuilt 70, 82; sacked by Genseric, June, 455. The Roman consuls made large donations to this temple, and the emperor

Augustus bestowed on it 2000 pounds weight of gold, of which metal the roof was composed: its thresholds were of brass, and its interior was decorated with shields of solid silver. The Capitoline games, instituted 387 B.C. to commemorate the deliverance from the Gauls, were revived by Domitian, A.D. 86. The Campidoglio contains palaces of the senators, erected on the site of the Capitol by Michael Angelo soon after 1546. The corner-stone of the capitol at Washington, U.S.A., was laid 18 Sept. 1793.

The English capitulations, 1675, contain most favoured nation clauses, and were maintained till April, 1870, when Nubar Pasha, Egyptian minister of foreign affairs, persuaded the great powers to substitute mixed international courts and a uniform code. The capitulations were finally abolished July, 1872.

Remains of his famous tricremes which lie at the bottom of lake Nemi, discovered, in 1897. Capri was taken by sir Sydney Smith, 12 May, 1806.

CAPS AND HATS. About 1738, Sweden was much distracted by two factions thus named, the former in the interest of the Russians, and the latter in that of the French. They were broken up and the names prohibited by Gustavus III. in 1771, who desired to exclude foreign influence. His assassination by Ankarström, 16 March, 1792, set aside all his plans for the improvement of Sweden.

See under Navy of England. Subscriptions for relief of the widows and orphans of the lost totalled 57,824*l*. The fund was transferred to the Royal Commission of the Patriotic Fund.

CAPUA, capital of Campania, took the part of Hannibal when his army wintered here after the battle of Cannæ, 216 B.C., and it is said became enervated. In 211, when the Romans retook the city, they scourged and beheaded all the surviving senators; the others had poisoned themselves after a banquet previous to the surrender of the city. Only two persons escaped; one woman who had prayed for the success of the Romans, and another who succoured some prisoners. During the middle ages Capua was successively subjugated by the Greeks, Saracens, Normans, and Germans. It was restored to Naples in 1424, and captured by Caesar Borgia, 24 July, 1501; was taken by Garibaldi 2 Nov. 1860.

CAPUCHIN FRIARS, Franciscans, so named from wearing a Capuchon, or cowl hanging down upon their backs. The order was founded by Matthew Baschi, about 1525; and established by the pope Clement VII. 1529. The capuchin confessors of the queen Henrietta introduced here 1630, were imprisoned by the parliament, 1642.

CAR. The invention is mythically ascribed to Erichthonius of Athens. Covered cars (currus arcuati) were used by the Romans. The lectica (a soft cushioned car), next invented, gave place to the carpentum, a two-wheeled car, with an arched covering, hung with costly cloth. Still later were the carruca, in which the officers of state rode. Triumphant cars, introduced by Tarquin the Elder, were formed like a throne. See Carriages and Motor Car.

CARACAS (S. America), part of Venezuela, discovered by Columbus 1498. It was reduced by arms, and assigned as property to the Welsers, German merchants, by Charles V.; but for their tyranny, they were dispossessed in 1550, and a crown governor appointed. The province declared its independence, 9 May, 1810. In the city Leon de Caracas, on 26 March, 1812, nearly 12,000 persons perished by an earthquake. Population, 1900, 60,000. See Venezuela.

CARBOLIC ACID (or phenic acid), obtained by the distillation of pit-coal, by Laurent, 1846-7, is a powerful antiseptic. It is largely manufactured for surgical purposes, and was advantageously used at Carlisle and Exeter in the deodorisation of sewage (1860-1); and as a disinfectant during the prevalence of cholera in London in 1866. It was successfully used for embalming by professor Seely in 1868. Professor F. Crace Calvert, a great manufacturer of this acid, died 1873.

CARBON was shown to be a distinct element by Lavoisier in 1788. He proved the diamond to be its purest form, and converted it into carbonic acid gas by combustion.

CARBONARI (charcoal-burners), a powerful secret society in Italy, which derived its origin, according to some, from the Waldenses, and which became prominent early in the present century. It aimed at the expulsion of foreigners from Italy, and the establishment of civil and religious liberty. In March, 1820, it is said that 650,000 joined the society, and an insurrection soon after broke out in Naples, general Pèpè taking the command. The king Ferdinand made political concessions, but the influence of the allied sovereigns at Laybach led Ferdinand to annul them and suppress the liberal party, Jan. 1821, when the Carbonari were denounced as traitors.

CARBONIC ACID GAS, a gaseous compound of carbon and oxygen, found in the air, and a product of combustion, respiration, and fermentation. The Grotto del Cane yields 200,000 lbs. per annum. No animal can breathe this gas. The briskness of champagne, beer, &c., is due to its presence. It was liquefied by atmospheric pressure by Faraday in 1823. On exposing the liquid to the air it becomes solid, resembling snow, through vaporisation. See under Cannon, 1889-90.

CARCHEMISH, see Hittites.

They first wore the red hat to remind them that they ought to shed their blood for religion, if required, and were declared princes of the church by Innocent IV., 1243 or 1245. Chatto's work on the "History of Playing Cards," published, 1848. CARIZMIANS (fierce shepherds living near the Caspian), having been expelled by the Tartars, invaded Syria in 1243. CARRIERS ACT, 11 Geo. IV. & 1 Will. IV. c. 68, 1830.

CARROCUM, a vehicle containing a crucifix and a banner, usually accompanied Italian armies in the middle ages. The Milanese lost theirs at Cortenuova, 27 Nov. 1237.

CARRON IRONWORKS, on the banks of the Carron, in Stirlingshire, established in 1760, are still (1905) the most extensive in the kingdom. The pieces of ordnance called Carronades or smashers, invented by gen. Melville, were first made at these works in 1779, but are now superseded.

CARROTS and other edible roots were imported from Holland and Flanders, about 1510.

CARS, see Carriages.

CARSE, a Scottish name for low alluvial lands, usually clayey and fertile, adjoining rivers.

CARTEL (challenge), a name given to the powerful coalition of the conservatives and national liberals, which for five years formed the government majority, 23, in the German Imperial parliament. The majority was lost by the elections, Feb., March, 1890.

CARTES DE VISITE. The small photographic portraits thus termed are said to have been first taken at Nice, by M. Ferrier, in 1857. The duke of Parma had his portrait placed upon his visiting cards, and his example was soon followed in Paris and London.

CARTESIAN DOCTRINES, promulgated by René Descartes, the French philosopher, in 1637. His metaphysical principle is, "I think, therefore I am;" his physical principle, "Nothing exists but substance." He accounts for all physical phenomena on his theory of vortices, motions excited by God, the source of all motion. He was born 1596, and died at Stockholm, the guest of queen Christina, in 1650.

CARTHAGE (N. coast of Africa near Tunis), founded by Dido or Elissa, according to the legend adopted by Virgil in the Æneid, some time in the 9th century B.C.; 878, 853, 826 are mentioned. She fled from her brother Pygmalion, king of Tyre, who had killed her husband, and took refuge in Africa. Towns subject to Carthage were gradually founded along the coast, and colonies in Spain and Sicily. Carthage disputed the empire of the world with Rome, which occasioned the Punic wars. The Carthaginians bore the character of a faithless people, hence the term Punic faith. Cato the censor ended his speeches in the senate with Delenda est Carthago! "Carthage must be destroyed!" Many councils were held here, A.D. 200-535.

CARTHAGENA, or NEW CARTHAGE (S.E. Spain), built by Hasdrubal, the Carthaginian general, 242 B.C.; taken by surprise by Publius Scipio Africanus, 210 or 209. The modern Carthage was taken by a British force under sir

John Leake, June, 1706, retaken by the duke of Berwick, Nov. It was the last place held by the Intransigentes and Internationalists of Spain; was besieged by general Martin Campos, about 22 Aug. 1873. Bombardment begun 26 Nov., taken by general Lopez Dominguez, 12 Jan. 1874. Pop. 1900, 99,871; 1910 (est.) 116,000. See Spain.—CARTHAGENA, in Columbia, South America, was taken by sir Francis Drake in 1585; pillaged by the French buccaneers in 1697; bombarded by admiral Vernon in March, 1741; and unsuccessfully besieged, April, 1741.

CARTHUSIANS, a religious order (springing from the Benedictines) founded by Bruno of Cologne, who retired with six companions about 1084, to Chartreuse (which see), in the mountains of Dauphiné. Their austere rules were formed by Basil VII., their general. In France in 1880 the majority of the order refused to "seek authorisation" to remain in their monasteries, were expelled, and sought refuge in England and other countries. They appeared in England about 1180, and a monastery was founded by sir William Manny, 1371, on the site of the present Charter-house, London; see Charter-house. The Carthusian powder of father Simon, at Chartreuse, was first compounded about 1715.

CARTOONS, large chalk drawings preparatory to oil painting. Those of RAPHAEL (twenty-five in number) were designed (for tapestries) in the chambers of the Vatican under Julius II. and Leo X. about 1510 to 1516. The seven preserved were purchased in Flanders by Rubens for Charles I. of England, for Hampton-court palace in 1629. They were removed to South Kensington 28 April, 1865.—The tapestries executed at Arras from these designs are at Rome. They were twice carried away by invaders, in 1526 and 1798, and were restored in 1815.—The Cartoons for the British houses of parliament were exhibited in July, 1843. The term is also used to denote semi-satirical drawings having reference to political or social events.

CASABLANCA INCIDENT. This took place on 25 Sept. 1908, when six men of the French foreign legion in Morocco, attempting to escape on board a German steamer, were stopped by a French guard, who had orders to arrest the deserters. In the scrimmage a German clerk was said to have been struck. Germany magnified the incident into a matter of international importance, which was settled by the Hague court of arbitration May, 1909.

By the Church Temporalities Act, 1833, it ceased to be archiepiscopal, and was joined to Waterford and Lismore.

The true Cashmere shawls, first brought to England in 1666, are well imitated at Bradford and Huddersfield. Shawls of Thibetan wool, for the omrah's, cost 150 rupees each, about 1650. CASTLES. The castle of the Anglo-Saxon was a tower keep, either round or square, and ascended by a flight of steps in front. William I. erected 48 strong castles. Several hundreds, built by permission of Stephen, between 1135 and 1154, were demolished by Henry II., 1154. Many were dismantled in the civil wars. Richborough, Studfall, and Burgh are existing specimens of Roman castles.

CAT. The generally received opinion that our domestic cat is derived from the European wild cat doubted by Mr. T. Bell (1827). Ruppell (died 1794) found a wild cat in Nubia, whose conformation agreed with that of the Egyptian cat mummies. See Mummies. Cats fetched high prices in the middle ages, and were protected by law in Wales, about 948. Great cat shows are annually held at the Crystal palace; the 35th, 1903. Belzoni in 1815-18 explored many Egyptian catacombs, built 3000 years ago. He brought to England the sarcophagus of Psammethichus, formed of oriental alabaster, exquisitely sculptured. In the Parisian catacombs (formerly stone quarries), human remains from the cemetery of the Innocents were deposited in 1785; and many of the victims of the revolution in 1792-4, are interred in them.—On 31 May, 1578, some labourers digging on the Via Salaria, two miles from Rome, discovered the celebrated catacombs, of which an account with engravings was published by Antonio Bosio, in his "Roma Sotteranea" (1632), and by Aringhi (1650), and others. John Evelyn saw them in 1645. Elaborate accounts have been published recently by De Rossi; an abstract of whose researches will be found in the "Roma Sotteranea" of the Rev. J. S. Northcote and W. R. Brownlow, 1869 and 1879.

The natives were able seamen: being frequently unruly, their peculiar privileges were abolished in 1714. See Barcelona.

CATALYTIC FORCE. The discovery in 1819 by Thénard of the decomposition of peroxide of hydrogen by platinum, and by Döbereiner in 1823 of its property to ignite a mixture of hydrogen and oxygen, formed the groundwork of the doctrine of catalytic force, also termed "action of contact or presence," put forth by Berzelius and Mitscherlich. An earthquake did great damage, 22 Feb. 1817. In Aug. 1862, the town was held by Garibaldi and his volunteers, in opposition to the Italian government. He was captured on 29 Aug. Population in 1908, 163,000.

CATECHISMS are said to have been compiled in the 8th or 9th century. Luther's were published 1520 and 1529. The catechism of the church of England in the first book of Edward VI., 7 March, 1549, contained merely the baptismal vow, the creed, the ten commandments, and the Lord's prayer, with explanations; but James I. ordered the bishops to add an explication of the sacraments, 1612. The catechism of the council of Trent was published in 1566; those of the Assembly of Divines at Westminster (one termed the shorter catechism), 1647 and 1648; Evangelical Free Church catechism, published, 5 Jan. 1899.

CATILINE'S CONSPIRACY. Lucius Sergius Catiline, a dissolute Roman noble, having been refused the consulship (65 B.C.), conspired to kill the senate, plunder the treasury, and set Rome on fire. This conspiracy was timely discovered and frustrated. A second plot (in 63), was detected by the consul Cicero, whom he had resolved to murder. Catiline's daring appearance in the senate-house, after his guilt was known, drew forth Cicero's celebrated invective, "Quousque tandem, Catilina!" on 8 Nov. On seeing five of his accomplices arrested, Catiline fled to Gaul, where his partisans were assembling an army. Cicero punished the conspirators at home, and Petreius routed their forces; Catiline being killed in the engagement, Jan. 62 B.C.

CAUCUS. An American term applied to a private meeting of the leading politicians of a party to agree upon the plans to be pursued during an election or session of congress. This institution is now a very powerful antagonist to public opinion. The word is said to be derived from "ship"-caulkers' meetings. A "caucus club" is mentioned by John Adams, in 1763. Bartlett. Similar meetings are occasionally held in London by conservatives and liberals; one was held by Mr. Gladstone respecting the ballot bill, 6 July, 1871. Jealousy respecting the system was aroused in 1878.

The Birmingham Liberal association began in 1868 a powerful caucus, systematized by Mr. Schnadhorst, very efficient 1873 et seq.; a similar conservative association since formed; a network of similar societies exists throughout the kingdom, Autumn 1885

The London Liberal and Radical council, actually a caucus, active in November, 1901, presented to Mr. Schnadhorst by the liberals, 9 March, 1887; he retired from politics, Nov. 1894, died 2 Jan. 1900

CAUDINE FORKS, according to Livy, the Furcula Caudina (in Samnium, S. Italy), were two narrow defiles or gorges, united by a range of mountains on each side. The Romans went through the first pass, but found the second blocked up; on returning they found the first similarly obstructed. Being thus hemmed in by the Samnites, under the command of C. Pontius, they surrendered at discretion, 321 B.C. (after a fruitless contest, according to Cicero). The Roman senate broke the favourable treaty. C. Pontius, taken prisoner in the third Samnite war, was executed at Rome, 290.

CAULIFLOWER, said to have been brought from Cyprus to England about 1603.

CAUSTIC, IN PAINTING, a method of burning colours into wood or ivory, invented by Gausias of Sicily. He painted his mistress Glycère sitting on the ground making garlands with flowers; the picture was hence named Stephanoplocon. It was bought by Lucullus for two talents, 335 B.C. Pliny.

CAUTIONARY TOWNS (Holland), (the Briel, Flushing, Rammekins, and Walcheren), were given to queen Elizabeth in 1585 as security for their repaying her for assistance in their struggle with Spain. They were restored to the Dutch republic by James I. in 1616.

CAVALIER. The appellation given to the supporters of the king during the civil war, from a number of gentlemen forming themselves into a body-guard for the king in 1641. They were opposed to the Roundheads, or parliamentarians.

CAVALRY. Used by the Canaanites in war, 1450 B.C. (Josh. xi. 4). Attached to each Roman legion was a body of 300 horse, in ten turmae; the commander always a veteran.—The Persians had 10,000 horse at Marathon, 490 B.C.; and 10,000 Persian horse were slain at the battle of Issus, 333 B.C. Plutarch. In the wars with Napoleon I. the British cavalry reached to 31,000 men. Our cavalry force, in 1840, was 10,733. In 1867, cavalry of the line, 10,023; in depots, 838; in India, 5421; total, 17,599; in 1880, total 17,245; 1903-4, 554 officers, 1337 non-commissioned, 14,271 rank and file; in India, total 5,635; in 1909, the total cavalry strength was 20,448, distributed as follows: Home, 11,777; Colonies and Egypt 3,028. India, 5,643 Cavalry Manœuvres on the Berkshire Downs, eight regiments, director, sir Evelyn Wood; general in command, sir Baker Russell, Sept. 1890. The manœuvres are now annually repeated near Aldershot, Aug.-Sept. see Horse Guards, &c. "Achievements of Cavalry," by gen. sir Evelyn Wood, published 1897.

CAVENDISH COLLEGE, Cambridge (founded in 1871 to give cheap university education to youths younger than those admitted at other colleges, and leaving earlier for business), was inaugurated by the duke of Devonshire, 26 Oct. 1876. New buildings opened by the marquis of Hartington, 16 Nov. 1889; closed since 1891.

CAVENDISH EXPERIMENT. In 1798 the hon. Henry Cavendish described his experiment for determining the mean density of the earth, by comparing the force of terrestrial attraction with that of the attraction of leaden spheres of known magnitude and density, by means of the torsion balance. Brande. The Cavendish Society, for the publication of chemical works, which ceased with Gmelin's Chemistry (1848-72), was established 1846.

CAVES are frequently mentioned in the Bible as dwellings, refuges, and burying-places. Mr. W. B. Dawkins' "Cave-hunting; Researches on the Evidence of Caves respecting the Early Inhabitants of Europe," was published 1874. Oreston cave, Devon, discovered 1816; Kirkdale, Yorkshire, 1821; Kent's Hole, Torquay, which see, 1825; Brixham cave, 1858; Wookey Hole, Somerset, 1859; and many others, have been well explored, including the caves in the valley of the Lesse in Belgium, of the Pyrenees and Perigord in France, and the Kesslerloch, Thaugen, Switzerland. The remains of extinct mammalia found in these caves furnish proof of the antiquity of man.

CAWNPORE, a town in India, on the Doab, a peninsula between the Ganges and Jumna. During the mutiny in June, 1857, it was garrisoned by native troops under sir Hugh Wheeler. These broke out into revolt. An adopted son of the old Peishwa Bajee Rao, Nana Sahib, who had long lived on friendly terms with the British, came apparently to their assistance, but joined the rebels. He took the place after three weeks' siege, 28 June; and in spite of a treaty massacred great numbers of the British, without respect to age or sex, in the most cruel manner. General Havelock defeated Nana Sahib, 16 July, at Futtehpore, and retook Cawnpore, 17 July. Sir Colin Campbell defeated the rebels here on 6 Dec. following. A column was erected here, in memory of the sufferers, by their relatives of the 32nd regiment. In Dec. 1860, Nana was said to be living at Thibet; and in Dec. 1861 was incorrectly said to have been captured at Kurrachee; see India, 1857. Population, 1901, 197,170.

12 Jan. 1809, but was restored to the French in 1814. Here is produced the Capsicum baccatum, or cayenne pepper. Many French political prisoners were sent here in 1848.

CECILIAN SOCIETY, see Cæcilian.

CEDAR CREEK AND MOUNTAIN, Virginia, U.S. On 19 Oct. 1864, gen. Sheridan converted the defeat of the Federals by the Confederates under Longstreet into a complete victory. At CEDAR MOUNTAIN gen. "Stonewall" Jackson defeated Banks, 9 Aug. 1862.

CEDAR TREE. The red cedar (Juniperus virginiana) came from North America before 1664; the Bermudas cedar from Bermudas before 1683; the cedar of Lebanon (Pinus Cedrus) from the Levant before 1683. In 1850 a grove of venerable cedars, about 40 feet high, remained on Lebanon. The cedar of Goa (Cupressus lusitanica) was brought to Europe by the Portuguese about 1683; see Cypress.

CELERY is said to have been introduced into England by the French marshal, Tallard, during his captivity in England, after his defeat at Blenheim by Marlborough, 2 Aug. 1704.

CELESTIAL GLOBE, see Globes.

CELIBACY (from celebs, unmarried) was preached by St. Anthony in Egypt about 305. His early converts lived in caves, &c., till monasteries were founded. The doctrine was rejected in the council of Nice, 325. Celibacy was enjoined on bishops only in 692. The decree was opposed in England, 958-978. The Romish clergy generally were enjoined a vow of celibacy by pope Gregory VII. in 1073-85, and its observance was established by the council of Placentia, held in 1095. Marriage was restored to the English clergy in 1547. The marriage of the clergy was proposed, but negatived at the council of Trent (1563); also at a conference of the old catholics at Bonn, June, 1876. Sir Bartle Frere termed the Zulu army "a celibate man-slaying machine," 1878.

CELL THEORY (propounded by Schwann in 1839) supposes that the ultimate particles of all animal and vegetable tissues are small cells. Some of the lowest forms of animal and vegetable life are composed of merely a single cell, as the great majority of the Protozoa and Protophyta. Prof. Virchow proved in his Croonian lecture in London that all new cells proceed from old ones, 16 March, 1858, see Protoplastism.

A census of the people is stated to have been taken at Florence in 1527; at Venice, 1584; in France, 1700; in Sweden, 1749; and in the United States, N.A., 1790. In England the proposal for a census in 1753 was opposed as profane and subversive of liberty. In the United Kingdom the census is now taken at decennial periods since 1801; 1811, 1821, 1831, 1841, 1851, 1861 (7 April), 1871 (3 April), 1881 (3 April), 1891 (5 April), 1901 (31 March). CHAIN BRIDGES, see Suspension Bridges.

CHAIN-CABLES, PUMPS, AND SHOT. Iron chain-cables were in use by the Veneti, a people intimately connected with the Belgæ of Britain in the time of Caesar, 57 B.C. These cables came into use, generally in the navy of England, in 1812. Acts for the proving and sale of chain-cables and anchors were passed in 1864, 1871, and 1874.—CHAIN SHOT, to destroy the rigging of an enemy's ship, were invented by the Dutch admiral, De Witt, in 1666.—CHAIN-PUMPS were first used on board the Flora, British frigate, in 1787.

CHALCEDON, Asia Minor, opposite Byzantium, colonised by Megarians about 684 B.C. It was taken by Darius, 505 B.C.; by the Romans, 74 B.C.; plundered by the Goths, A.D. 259; taken by Chosroes, the Persian, 609; by Orchan, the Turk, 1338. Here was held the "Synod of the Oak," 403; and the fourth general council, which annulled the act of the "Robber Synod," 8 Oct. 451.

CHALCIS, see Eubœa.

CHALDÆA, the ancient name of Babylonia, but afterwards restricted to the S.W. portion. The Chaldeans were devoted to astronomy and astrology; see Dan. ii. &c.—The CHALDÆAN REGISTERS of celestial observations, said to have commenced 2234 B.C., were brought down to the taking of Babylon by Alexander, 331 B.C. (1903 years).

CHALGROVE (Oxfordshire). At a skirmish here with prince Rupert, 18 June, 1643, John Hampden, of the parliament party, was wounded, and died 24 June. A column was erected to his memory, 18 June, 1843.

CHALONS-SUR-MARNE (N. E. France). Here the emperor Aurelian defeated Tetricus, the last of the pretenders to the throne, termed the Thirty Tyrants, 274; and here in 451 Aëtius defeated Attila the Hun, compelling him to retire into Pannonia.

CHAM, see Charivari.

CHAMBERLAIN, early a high court officer in France, Germany, and England. The office of chamberlain of the exchequer ceased in 1834.

JOINT-HEREDITARY LORD GREAT CHAMBERLAINS OF ENGLAND.—The sixth great officer of state, whose duties, among others, relate to coronations and public solemnities. The office was long held by the De Veres, earls of Oxford, granted by Henry I. in 1101. On the death of John De Vere, the sixteenth earl, Mary, his sole daughter, marrying lord Willoughby De Eresby, the right was established in that nobleman's family by a judgment of the house of peers, 2 Charles I. 1625. On the death of his descendant, unmarried, in July, 1779, the house of lords and twelve judges concurred that the office devolved to lady Willoughby De Eresby, and her sister the lady Georgina Charlotte Bertie, as heirs to their brother Robert, duke of Ancaster, deceased; and that they had powers to appoint a deputy to act for them, not under the degree of a knight, who, if his majesty approved of him, might officiate accordingly. Beaton. This dignity was for some time held jointly by the lord Willoughby De Eresby and the marquis of Cholmondeley, descendants of John de Vere, earl of Oxford. Lord Willoughby De Eresby died without issue 27 Aug. 1870, and lord Aveland, his sister's son, was appointed to act. The marquis of Cholmondeley died 16 Dec. 1884, and was succeeded by his grandson, George H. H., the present marquis, 1884; re-appointed, 2 Sept. 1901; again by the king, 21 June, 1902. Lady Willoughby De Eresby died 26 July, 1879, was succeeded by her sons, the earl of Ancaster and lord Carrington (earl, 1895).

LORD CHAMBERLAIN OF THE HOUSEHOLD.—An ancient office. The title is from the French Chambellan, in Latin Camerarius. Sir William Stanley, knt., afterwards beheaded, was lord chamberlain, 1 Henry VII. 1485. A vice-chamberlain acts in the absence of the chief; the offices are co-existent. Beaton. The earl of Lathom, 1885; lord Carrington, 1892; earl of Lathom, 1895 (died aged 61, 10 Nov. 1898); the earl of Hopetoun, Dec. 1898; the earl of Clarendon, Sept. 1900; Viscount Althorp, 1905.

The Chamberlain of London is an ancient office. Chancellory of the orders of knighthood transferred to the lord chamberlain's office in 1904.

CHAMBERS, see Commerce, Agriculture, Shipping.

CHAMBRE ARDENTE (fiery chamber), an extraordinary French tribunal so named from the punishment frequently awarded by it. Francis I. in 1535, and Henry II. in 1549, employed it for the extirpation of heresy, which led to the civil war with the Huguenots in 1560; and in 1679 Louis XIV. appointed one to investigate the poisoning cases which arose after the execution of the marchioness Brinvilliers.

CHAMBRE INTROUVABLE, a name given to the chamber of deputies, elected in France in 1815, on account of its ignorance, incapacity, and bigoted reactionary spirit.

CHAMPAGNE, an ancient province, N. E. France, once part of the kingdom of Burgundy, was governed by counts from the 10th century till it was united to Navarre, count Thibaut becoming king, in 1234. The countess Joanna married Philip IV. of France, in 1284; and in 1361 Champagne was annexed by their descendant king John. The effervescing wine termed Champagne became popular in the latter part of the 18th century.

CHAMP DE MARS, an open square in front of the Military school at Paris, with artificial embankments on each side, extending nearly to the river Seine. The ancient assemblies of the Frankish people, the germ of parliaments, held annually in March, received this name. In 747, Pepin changed the month to May. Here was held, 14 July, 1790 (the anniversary of the capture of the Bastille), the "federation," or solemnity of swearing fidelity to the "patriot king" and new constitution: great rejoicings followed. On 14 July, 1791, a second great meeting was held here, directed by the Jacobin clubs, to sign petitions on the "altar of the country," praying for the abdication of Louis XVI. A commemorative meeting took place, 14 July, 1792. Another constitution was sworn to here, under the eye of Napoleon I., 1 May, 1815, at a ceremony called the Champ de Mai. The prince-president (afterwards Napoleon III.) had a grand review in the Champ de Mars, and distributed eagles to the army, 10 May, 1852. Here also was held the international exhibitions opened 1 April, 1867, and 1 May, 1878, see Paris.

CHAMPERTY, see Barratry.

CHAMPIONS OF CHRISTENDOM, see Seven Champions of Christendom.

CHAMPION OF THE KING OF ENGLAND (most honourable), an ancient office, since 1377 has been attached to the manor of Scrivelsby, held by the Marmion family. Their descendant, sir Henry Dymoke, the seventeenth of his family who held the office, died 28 April, 1865; succeeded by his brother John; he died, and his son Henry Lionel succeeded, who died Dec. 1875; succeeded by Francis Seaman Dymoke, who died 2 June, 1893; succeeded by his son, Mr. Francis Seaman Dymoke. An account of the champions, and the Marmion and Dymoke families, is given by the rev. Samuel Lodge, in his "Scrivelsby," 1893. At the coronation of the English kings the champion used to challenge any one that should deny their title. The Dymoke suit of armour presented to the king, 13 June, 1901.

CHAMPLAIN, see Lake Champlain.

CHANCELLOR OF ENGLAND, LORD HIGH, the first lay subject after the princes of the blood royal. Anciently the office was conferred upon some dignified ecclesiastic termed Cancellarius, or doorkeeper, who admitted suitors to the sovereign's presence. Arfastus or Herefast, chaplain to the king (William the Conqueror) and bishop of Elmham, was lord chancellor in 1067. Hardy. Thomas à Becket was made chancellor in 1154. The first person qualified by education, to decide causes upon his own judgment, was sir Thomas More, appointed in 1529, before which time the officer was rather a state functionary than a judge. Sir Christopher Hatton, appointed lord chancellor in 1587, was very ignorant, on which account the first reference was made to a master in 1588. The great seal has been frequently put in commission; the lord chancellor's powers enlarged over legal officials by act passed in 1881; in 1813 the office of Vice-Chancellor was established; see Keeper, and Vice-Chancellor.—Salary, 6000*l.*; as speaker of house of lords, 4000*l.*

CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER, see Exchequer.

CHANCELLOR OF SCOTLAND, LORD, The laws of Malcolm II. (1004) say:—"The chancellor sall at al tymes assist the king in giving him counsall mair secretly nor the rest of the nobility. . . . The chancellor sall be ludgit neir unto the kingis grace, for keeping of his bodie, and the seill, and that he may be readie, baith day and night, at the kingis command." Sir James Balfour. Evan was lord chancellor to Malcolm III., Canmore, 1057; and James, earl of Seafeld, afterwards Findlater, was the last lord chancellor of Scotland, the office having been abolished in 1708; see Keeper.

CHANCELLOR'S AUGMENTATION ACT, passed 1863, enabled the lord chancellor to sell the advowson of certain livings in his gift for augmenting poor benefices.

CHANCELLORSVILLE, Virginia, U.S., a large brick hotel, once kept by a Mr. Chancellor, was the site of severe sanguinary conflicts between the American federal army of the Potomac under general Hooker, and the confederates under general Lee. On 28 April, 1863, the federal army crossed the Rappahannock; on 2 May, general "Stonewall" Jackson furiously attacked and routed the right wing, but was mortally wounded by his own party firing on him by mistake. Gen. Stuart took his command, and after a severe conflict on 3 and 4 May, with great loss to both parties, the federals were compelled to recross the Rappahannock. The struggle was compared to that at Hougomont during the battle of Waterloo. Jackson died 10 May.

CHANCERY, COURT OF, is mythically said to have originated with Alfred (871-901) or William I. (1066-1087). Its power was probably derived from the council of state, under which it acted, and of which it became gradually independent. Its acts were frequently complained of by the commons in the 14th and 15th centuries. Its professed object was to render justice complete, and to moderate the rigour of other courts that are bound to the strict letter of the law. It gives relief to or against infants, notwithstanding their minority; and to or against married women, notwithstanding their coverture; and all frauds, deceits, breaches of trust and confidence, for which there is no redress at common law, are relievable here. Blackstone; see Chancellors of England. The delays in chancery proceedings having long given dissatisfaction, the subject was brought before parliament in 1825, and frequently since; which led to the passing of important acts in 1852, 1853, 1855, 1858, and 1867, to amend the practice in the court of chancery. See Accountant, County Courts, and Supreme Court, Berkeley.

The Chancery division of the high court of justice now consists of the lord chancellor and six judges, an additional judge having been appointed, Oct. 1899. The chancery taxing office, the bankruptcy and other taxing departments, amalgamated with the central office, 11 Jan. 1902.

CHANNEL ISLANDS, a group about 80 miles south of England, see Jersey, &c.

CHANNEL TUNNEL COMPANY, registered 15 Jan. 1872; see Tunnels.

The construction of a channel bridge from Dover to Calais was proposed in Paris, 1880, by MM. Schneider and Hersent, and sir John Fowler and Mr. (afterwards sir Benjamin) Baker, and discussed in 1890.

M. Bunau Varilla, of Paris, engineer, publishes his plans for a mode of communication between Dover and Calais, consisting of a pier or viaduct half a mile long, on each side connected by a tunnel, and estimated cost 10,000,000. . . . May, 1890
 Sir E. J. Reed proposed the construction of a tubular railway, above the bed of the sea. . . . 1890-1

In relation to a proposed Channel bridge, a new survey of the Straits of Dover was undertaken; a report on the scheme was published 26 Dec. . . . 1890
 Channel Tunnel Bill (1906) withdrawn . . . April, 1907

CHANTING is attributed to Ambrose, about 386. About 602, Gregory the Great added tones to the Ambrosian chant, and established singing schools. M. Gevaert, of Brussels, in Oct. 1889, asserted that this statement is legendary and that it was Gregory III. (731-741) who made the change. Chanting was adopted by some dissenters about 1859.

John Marbeck's "Book of Common Praier noted" (1559) is the first adaptation of the ancient Latin music to the Reformed Church; Clifford's "Common Tunes" for chanting, 1664.

The Plainsong and Medieval Music Society was founded in 1888.

"The Sarum Gradual and the Gregorian Antiphonale Missarum," edited by W. H. Frere, 1896.

CHANTREY LEGACY, see Royal Academy. Report of Select Committee, 4 Aug. 1904.

CHANTRY, a chapel endowed with revenue for priests to sing mass for the souls of the donors; see Chanting. Chantries were abolished in England in 1545.

CHAPEL. There are free chapels, chapels of ease, the chapel royal, &c. Cowell. The gentlemen pensioners (formerly poor knights of Windsor, who were instituted by the direction of Henry VIII. in his testament, 1546-7) were called knights of the chapel; see Poor Knights of Windsor.—The Private Chapels Act passed 14 Aug. 1871. The place of conference among printers, and the conference itself, are by them called a chapel, it is said, because the first work printed in England by Caxton was executed in a ruined chapel in Westminster-abbey.

CHAPLAIN, a clergyman who performs divine service in a chapel, for a prince or nobleman. About seventy chaplains are attached to the chapel royal. The chief personages invested with the privilege of retaining chaplains are the following, with the number that was originally allotted to each rank, by 21 Hen. VIII. c. 13 (1529):—

Archbishop. . . . .	8	Knight of the Garter . . .	3
Duke . . . . .	6	Duchess . . . . .	2
Bishop . . . . .	6	Marchioness . . . . .	2
Marquis . . . . .	5	Countess . . . . .	2
Earl . . . . .	5	Baroness . . . . .	2
Viscount . . . . .	4	Master of the Rolls . . .	2
Baron . . . . .	3	Royal Almoner . . . . .	2
Chancellor . . . . .	3	Chief Justice . . . . .	1

CHAPLETS, the string of beads used by the Roman Catholics in reciting the Lord's prayer, Ave Maria, &c.; see Beads.

CHAPTER. Anciently the bishop and clergy lived in the cathedral, the latter to assist the former in performing holy offices and governing the church, until the reign of Henry VIII. The chapter is now an assembly of the clergy of a collegiate church or cathedral. Cowell. The chapter-house of Westminster-abbey was built in 1250. By consent of the abbot, the commoners of England held their parliaments there from 1377 until 1547, when Edward VI. granted them the chapel of St. Stephen.
